The Hitler Boycott.
Opening the Holy Door.
A Florida Canal.
Too Many Baby Bonnets.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

MIAMI, Fla., April 1.

BERLIN DESCRIBES Nazi-Hitler preparations for a nation-wide boycott of Germany's Jewish citizens, that Nazis call "the beginning of a war on the entire Jewish race of the world."

That is easy to say, not easy to carry out. Germany's government, not expressly approving the boycott, stood yesterday while "Nazi storm troopers" cleared Berlin courts of Jewish judges and lawyers, among others driving out the chief justice, Kurt Soelling.

THE HITLER party announces that it will boycott all Jews, their business, merchandise, and the boycott will include "converted Jews."

All but the ignorant know that this will hurt Germany far more than it will injure the Jews.

And all but the ignorant know that no boycott planned by a temporary dictator can inflict "world-wide injury on the Jewish people."

That which could not be done by wholesale murdering, torturing and other atrocities of the middle ages will not be done now.

TODAY, THE holy door of St. Peter's in Rome was opened by Pope Pius. With a hammer of gold he tapped the black marble cross in the center of the walled-in door. The heavy masonry, undermined in advance, gave way, and the door, usually opened only once in twenty-five years, opened to commemorate the nineteen hundredth anniversary of the passion, death and resurrection of Christ.

The opening of this holy door, one of the most solemn and important rituals in the church, marks the beginning of the present Holy Year, declared by the Pope.

The door sill was washed clear of masonry debris with holy water, especially blessed, and dried with a special cloth. All religions will unite with the Pope in hoping that this year will see the end of a depression that has afflicted the whole world.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has signed the bill to put 250,000 men at work in national forests, replanting, protecting, etc. The program might include planting trees by scattering seeds from airplanes on barren hillsides and burnt-over tracts. That was done in France after the big war.

THE ADMINISTRATION, seeking work for the unemployed in undertakings that would show a profit, should consider necessity of a ship canal across Florida connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico. Some FACTS are submitted.

The enterprise would pay for itself, principal, interest and operating cost, over a period of fifty years. In addition it would produce savings for the people of this nation, equalling more than twenty per cent of construction cost every year for all time.

It would put 17,000 men to work on the canal for four years, and 30,000 more for eighteen months in manufacturing areas. The Florida Canal would be used by twice as many ships as now use the Panama Canal, and provide a vital link in the canal system from Boston to Mexico.

THIS CANAL, to cost $118,000,000, would save thousands of ships the long journey around Key West and the southern end of Florida.

It should begin on the Atlantic coast, in accordance with common sense of government engineering, at a point near the [illegible] boundary of Georgia, [illegible]nsonville, Florida, or [illegible]rida.

SAN FRANCISCO LAWYER BECOMES CHIEF DRY ENFORCER

WOODCOCK POST ASSIGNED TO DALRYMPLE

New Director Takes Oath, Assuming Duties at Once

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP.)—A. V. Dalrymple, San Francisco attorney, took the oath of office as director of the nation's prohibition forces today and immediately took over the duties of his office.

Temporarily, he will be assisted by the former director, Amos W. W. Woodcock, who has been appointed a special assistant to the Attorney General to help the San Francisco attorney familiarize himself with the duties.

Woodcock said he hoped to return to the practice of law very shortly.

Deets Pickett, research secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance, issued a statement calling the appointment a "happy selection." Pickett said:

"He is honest, courageous and energetic, and at the same time discreet. I believe that he will be particularly valuable to the country at this time when adjustment is being made due to new legislation."

Dalrymple was a supporter of President Roosevelt and Senator McAdoo, of California, in the last campaign.

Under President Wilson he was supervising federal prohibition agent for the central division, comprising Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. Earlier he headed enforcement of narcotic laws in the Philippine Islands. He served in the Spanish-American and World wars.

As one of his last acts as director, Woodcock instructed his agents yesterday to concentrate in the future on combatting unlawful distilled liquor and to aid in administration of the new beer law by suppressing illegal brewers and preventing unlawful shipments of beer into dry states.

BUILDERS MEET IN APPEAL FOR FEDERAL AID

Will Ask Lawmakers To Back Bills for R. F. C. Fund Use

An effort to expedite federal aid on public improvements in the Pittsburgh district was set for today at a meeting at the William Penn Hotel, attended by state legislators, architects, engineers and material men.

Mayor John S. Herron was scheduled to address the meeting, to be called to order by former Mayor William A. Magee.

Speakers also include L. F. Rains, president of the A. M. Byers Company; H. M. Reed, president of the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company; R. L. Clause, vice president of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company; Edgar J. Kaufmann, N. B. Jacobs, John Ihlder, E. N. Hunting, L. F. McQueen and H. H. Robertson.

It was expected that more than 500 interests in the construction industry will be represented. The purpose of the meeting was to indicate to the legislators the importance of getting out of committee four bills relating to the use of Reconstruction Finance Corporation aid.

Three of the bills deal with formation of limited dividend corporations to replace obsolete buildings with federal aid. The other, the Harmuth bill, would put worthy public and private projects in a position to receive R. F. C. help.

Although other states have received millions of dollars for construction projects, it is pointed out no R. F. C. money has yet been expended for building in Pennsylvania.

SENATORS 'ARM' FOR MORGAN INQUIRY

Request Broad Powers To Expose Finance Kings' Secret Deals

By FRASER EDWARDS
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—All the secret transactions of America's financial titans with "other people's money" will be bared within the next few weeks by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

This was assured with the offering by Senator Fletcher, of Florida, of a resolution granting the committee the broadest powers conferred upon a congressional group since the "money trust" inquiry of 1912.

Chairman Fletcher said his committee would approve the resolution at today's meeting and report it to the Senate Monday.

AIMED AT MORGAN

In view of the present temper of the Senate, Democratic leaders declared the adoption of the resolution primarily directed at the activities of J. P. Morgan and Company, and other great private banking and investment houses, was a foregone conclusion.

While committee members were tight-lipped about information withheld from the committee by powerful financial institutions, they said the inquiry promised to be one of the most startling in Congressional history.

Not only will the committee unearth data to back President Roosevelt's "new deal" in the financial structure of the nation, but the historic Morgan-Rockefeller banking feud is expected to be brought into the open.

LEGAL BATTLE

The inquiry likewise will provide an arena for a legal "battle of the century." On one side will be stocky, swarthy, hard-hitting Ferdinand Pecora, special counsel of the committee, trained in the rough-and-tumble school of the courtroom and the New York District Attorney's office.

Opposing him will be the suave, soft-spoken, white-haired John W. Davis, former Solicitor General of the United States and Democratic nominee for President in 1924, attorney for J. P. Morgan & Co.

Husband Admits Caring for Wife But Asks Divorce

MRS. MARY KLOBY

Bases His Plea On 'Improper Language' And Quarrels

No one would have thought yesterday that Mary Kloby and her husband, Andrew, were on their way to get a divorce.

She had, she said, gotten her husband's dinner the night before, and he drove her and her friends to the Courthouse from their home in Homestead Park, she added.

Kloby asked the divorce, and his wife is contesting it. He took the stand before Judge Thomas Marshall late in the day and told that he wanted a divorce, that they had quarrels, that she used improper language. Under cross-examination by Attorney Henry Kaufmann, Kloby admitted that he paid his wife's doctor bills last October, although he applied for divorce last August, charging cruel and barbarous treatment and indignities. He said once he left her for four months, but returned.

F. R. DISCUSSES GREAT POWER, FLOOD PLAN

Cabinet, Congressmen Confer on Shoals, Valley Projects

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP.)—President Roosevelt today called in congressional leaders and cabinet members interested in the Tennessee Valley development for a conference.

He intends to submit a proposal to Congress early next week providing for development of the Tennessee River Valley through reforestation, flood control and power development.

Restoration of the Muscle Shoals, (Ala.,) power and nitrate plant is included in the program.

Those in the White House parley today included Senator Norris, of Nebraska, a sponsor of legislation for government operation of Muscle Shoals; Chairman McSwain of the House Military Committee, which handles Muscle Shoals legislation; Secretaries Wallace and Ickes and Representative Hill, of Alabama.

THOUSANDS ASK JOBS

Meanwhile it was shown, if the first day's applications are any criterion, that recruiting of 250,000 unemployed to carry out President Roosevelt's forest conservation-unemployment program won't take long.

Telephone operators in four departments which share responsibility for the program's administration — War, Agriculture, Interior and Labor—made this discovery. Thousands of inquiries came from within Washington alone.

Departmental mail bags also showed that other thousands of applicants did not wait for the President to sign the bill before acting. All applications were turned over to the Labor Department, which will handle recruiting.

WAIT ADVICE HERE

Welfare leaders here are uncertain what methods will be followed in mobilizing Pittsburgh's homeless men for work in forest camps.

The Central Application Bureau of the Society for the Improvement of the Poor has listed 8... homeless single men, and it is believed these would be the first affected. State authorities have received no instructions on their procedure.

BEER CONTROL BY CITIES SEEN

HARRISBURG, April 1.—(AP.)—With the Legislature and Gov. Pinchot deadlocked over beer control legislation, Pennsylvania cities are preparing to take regulations into their own hands if state measures are not enacted by April 1.

Most of those communities planning control acts are considering license measures that would prevent unrestrained sale of the 3.2 beverage and would net the municipality revenue.

Watching legislative developments, the Philadelphia City Council is ready to put through an emergency ordinance in two days.

Erie officials said they consider the question "political dynamite."

BOYCOTT OPENS IN GERMANY

day. He promised, however, "a return to normal" if this condition was fulfilled.

WARNING ON N. Y.

Dr. Goebbels further warned that "if New York and London boycotts German goods," the government will "take its gloves off" in handling the Jewish problem.

He admitted the Nazi government leaders were determined to carry out their long promised measures against Jews but declared the question would not have arisen so soon if it had not been for world-wide Jewish activities.

A government order shrank the National Socialist party's proposed indefinite boycott to one day's duration for the time being and it remained to be seen which of opposing groups in the government and party would be victorious in the end.

Only small comfort was derivable from the present limitations for a half million distracted German Jews who, to all practical purposes, already are ostracized socially and professionally.

There were so many tragic aspects to the situation that the boycott was only another bitter draught.

PROFESSIONAL BAN

Such permanent measures as barring Jews from legal practice, removing them from courts, hospitals and public institutions have been issued.

Doors were being closed to them all around. Jewish shop owners yesterday were ordered to discharge Jewish employes. The big Karstadt department store firm announced the resignation of Jewish members of the directorate and the dismissal of Jewish employes.

The Nationalist Socialist Physicians' Society issued the following statement:

"No German must go to a Jewish doctor again for treatment or buy at Jewish apothecaries. It is untrue that Jewish doctors, dentists and druggists are indispensable or better than Germans."

The Municipal Sick Relief Insurance Society issued a statement forbidding members from receiving treatment from Jewish physicians or patronizing Jewish druggists, opticians, dentists and masseurs or Jewish-owned medical baths, X-ray institutions and clinics.

U. S. Secretly Brings Pressure on Germany

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(INS.)—The trans-Atlantic telephone was today utilized by the American government in its efforts to induce the Hitler regime in Germany to call off the economic boycott of the Jews.

Undersecretary of State Phillips conferred over the telephone with George A. Gordon, counselor of the American Embassy in Berlin. Following the conversation, it was decided to withhold a statement which the State Department had considered issuing in connection with the situation.

Everyone maintained the utmost secrecy. This was on instructions from Secretary of State Hull, who felt that much more could be accomplished if the matter was handled quietly through diplomatic channels. He feared if it was made known the United States was bringing pressure to bear, even informally, on the German government, it would only agitate the situation.

Head of Closed Bank Ends Life With Gun

LARCHMONT, N. Y., April 1.—(AP.)—Samuel R. Bell, president of the Larchmont National Bank and Trust Company, shot and killed himself today. His bank had been closed and in the hands of a conservator since the national bank holiday.

RAIL HEADS SEE ROOSEVELT

By GEORGE E. DURNO
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—President Roosevelt today sought a showdown between railway executives, labor and security holders on the troublesome problem of a general railroad reorganization that ultimately will lead to lower freight rates.

He called to the White House a group representing the three factions with the intention of showing them a proposed administration plan and undertaking to bring them to some basis of agreement.

ATWOOD NAMED BANK RECEIVER

Arthur R. Atwood today was appointed receiver for the Bank of Pittsburgh, N. A., and the Duquesne National Bank. He succeeds C. O. Thomas, who recently was appointed conservator for the First National Bank of Detroit.

Mr. Atwood has been assistant receiver for the two local banks since they closed their doors in September, 1931. He previously was connected with the Clarksburg National Bank and Trust Company of Clarksburg, N. Y.

ELECT DETROIT BANK HEADS

DETROIT, April 1.—(AP.)—Permanent organization of the new National Bank of Detroit was to be effected today through the election of directors by the stockholders, followed by the election of officers.

Since the bank opened 10 days ago, it has been operated by officers chosen temporarily from the General Motors Corporation, which owns all common stock through its investment of $12,500,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which put an equal amount into the capitalization and agreed, in addition, to lend $10,000,000 more, owns all preferred stock.

The common stock is to be made available to depositors in the First National Bank-Detroit and the Guardian National Bank of Commerce, which the new bank is intended to supplant.

Meanwhile steps were under way to effect the dissolution of the Detroit Bankers Company.

'Exile' of 40 Brings State Investigation

The exiling of 40 Negroes, arrested in Beaver County and left on a road in Greene County, near the West Virginia line, is to be investigated by Attorney John D. Meyer, of Pittsburgh. Meyer was named a special deputy Attorney General to represent the state in the investigation.

Last January, 40 Negroes, including some women, were arrested in a raid near Beaver Falls. The next day they were put aboard trucks and hauled to Greene County, where they were put out.

BANKER KILLED BY AUTO FUMES

CLEVELAND, April 1.—(AP.)—Ernest A. Frame, 43-year-old vice president of the closed Standard Trust Bank, died late yesterday in the carbon monoxide-filled garage at his suburban Rocky River home.

His death, which police termed accidental, came on the day C. Stirling Smith, president of the bank, and Dale T. Winslow, former auditor, pleaded not guilty to indictments charging embezzlement of $19,000.

Coroner A. J. Pearse concurred in the police theory of accidental death. Relatives and neighbors said Frame was in good spirits and health.

Four Held For Court In Fake Coin Case

James D. Potts, 33; George Welsh, Jr., 19; James F. Coakley, 23, and Andrew C. Eazor, 25, all of Beaver Falls, were held for court by the United States Commissioner on a charge of possessing counterfeit half dollars.

Potts was said to have supplied the fake coins. His bond was set at $2,000 and those of the others at $1,500.

Police Force Door, Find Roomer Dead

The body of Errol S. Hook, 40, was found in his room, 421 Sandusky street, by police summoned by the landlady last night. The officers forced the room door. Death was due to natural causes, the Coroner's report said.

STOCK CONTROL BILL DISPUTED

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP.)—Numerous changes in the administration's bill to protect investors in securities were in prospect today as the House Interstate Commerce Committee continued hearings on the measure.

One outstanding revision that seemed likely would restrict its application to new issues of stocks and bonds. Huston Thompson, former federal trade commissioner, conceded that the present language did not exempt issues now on the market.

Thompson's interpretation of Mr. Roosevelt's intent was to apply the new law only to new issues or to those not yet sold.

But on the Senate side, Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, contended that "if you don't apply the law to existing securities, you lose 90 per cent of the value of the law."

Juror Protests High Price of Sandwiches

Charges of 20 and 25 cents for sandwiches and 10 cents for coffee to jurors have brought a protest from Alex M. Romah, Logan street.

Romah addressed a letter to the Judges of Common Pleas Court, saying he was a member of a disagreeing jury that was out at meal time and a waiter was summoned from a nearby restaurant. Because of the prices little was ordered, as some members felt they could not afford it, he wrote.

The letter was submitted to Prothonotary John Vogt, who refused to comment.

There was a time in court annals when jurors were not allowed to order food and had to stay together until they agreed or were discharged.

CITY PAYROLL SAFE UNTIL APRIL 12, HERRON DECLARES

PLANS NO SHIFT UNTIL COUNCIL ELECTS HIM

Kline's Office Staff Unchanged During 'Temporary' Term

The city's payrollers can rest easy during the few days of John S. Herron's regime as temporary Mayor.

What changes will occur after Herron is elected Mayor by Council, April 12, is a matter of speculations.

Herron is on record as not favoring changes while he acts as Council President and temporary Mayor. Late yesterday he told reporters the present staff in the Mayor's office and those of other city offices would be unchanged during that period.

Those "in the know" feel certain Herron is planning a shake-up in the Safety Department after he is elected as Charles H. Kline's successor. The shift is expected to center around Police Superintendent Peter P. Walsh.

Council members have received a proclamation issued by Herron as Council's President calling the meeting April 12 for the mayoralty election. That Herron will be elected is a foregone conclusion. Councilman Harry A. Little is expected to ascend to the Presidency of Council.

HURT BOY SORRY FOR TEACHER

CHARLEROI, Pa., April 1.—(AP). — The 14-year-old boy struck last July by the automobile of Miss Ada Buttermore, school teacher now serving a two-year jail sentence, says he is "sorry for the lady." In a hospital, Benny Wolcott declared,

"I guess she couldn't help it. It is tough being here, too."

In Uniontown the 34-year-old teacher who went to jail to serve the sentence on a charge of aggravated assault and battery, shunned the company of fellow inmates.

The court had offered to bail her if she made a substantial payment on a bill of $1,100 for treatment of the boy, but she went to jail after telling the judge she could raise no money as she had not been employed this term.

Weather Conditions.

The disturbance that was centered over the Mississippi Valley yesterday morning is now centered over Southern Michigan. Lowest barometer reported (29.50) at Detroit. It produced light to heavy rainfall over the whole eastern half of the country and the showery conditions continue over the Ohio Valley states, the lage region and eastward. Another center of low pressure developed eastward from the Southwest. It is now centered over Southeastern Kansas, lowest barometer (29.82), at Wichita. It is causing cloudiness over that section, but, as yet, no rainfall. The Canadian center is over Manitoba. Mild wather prevails this morning over the Atlantic Coast states, but it is somewhat colder over the Mississippi Valley states, and high pressure over the Northwest is causing below-freezing temperatures over that section. The lowest is 14 degrees at Yellowstone.

ARREST GROCER AFTER FIRE

A Wylie avenue grocer was held today in Center Avenue Police Station after a fire in his store, 1517 Wylie avenue. The arrest was ordered by Battalion Chief Daniel Jones, who said flames had been discovered in two places.

Two police dogs, "Queenie" and "Prince" were suffocated.

The grocer, Isadore Sigal, 42, said he and his wife, Mollie, and three daughters, Sarah, 16, Pauline, 15 and Leone, 9, were asleep on the second floor when the fire broke out.

Mrs. Sigal told firemen she was awakened by smoke and aided her daughters to safety.

Damage was estimated by Chief Jones at $2,500.

Move to Luxurious Quarters Delayed By Mayor

Mayor John S. Herron says he will not at present establish himself in ex-Mayor Kline's beautifully appointed office on the fifth floor of the City-County Building.

He will postpone the moving until he is elected by Council to fill Kline's unexpired term, which will be April 12.

Herron said he was doubtful what to do with the Mayor's uniformed chauffeur, for whom he sees no especial need. It was intimated he might continue to use the councilmanic automobile.

GIRL, BOY SAVED FROM CREEK

A young brother and sister were rescued from the Chartiers Creek, McKees Rocks, late yesterday by a quick-minded 24-year-old truck driver, who waded into the yellow mud and cold water to save them from possible drowning.

The children, Joseph Schrengost, 6, and his sister, Marie, 5, after wandering almost a mile from their home, 330 Island avenue, went to play in the creek at the foot of Linden street. Unaware of the soft mud along the stream bed, left by the recent flood, the two playmates became mired to their necks.

Their cries attracted more than a score of persons. One spectator went for a boat, another for the police, a third for his rubber boots and the rest stood motionless—just watching.

Then Jess Collmar, of 2557 West Carson street, a truck driver, was drawn to the scene by the crowd. Quickly and calmly he went into the stream up to hips, put Joseph under one arm and Marie under another, and carried them to safety. Police took them to their home.

NEW MEMBERS ON VOTE BOARD

Within less than an hour after Pittsburgh's two new Registration Commissioners were sworn into office, Mrs. Mary Jane Clark, one of the two new appointees, was installed as secretary at a reorganization meeting. John K. Morrow was re-elected chairman. Mrs. Clark pledged herself to the cause of clean elections.

John McCarthy, the other new member, said he would study registration problems before making statements.

The new members were sworn by Judge Ambrose B. Reid. They replaced John M. Henry and Thomas Joyce.

OFFICE AFIRE, DENTIST HELD

A dentist was arrested in his offices in the Bessemer Building early today after employes had informed police of a fire that caused slight damage to the suite.

The dentist, Dr. C. Buttner, 65, of 219 Halkett street, was charged with disorderly conduct after police had taken him to Allegheny General Hospital for examination.

Police said they found his offices had been damaged $25 by fire.

A letter addressed to Warden John McNeil, of the Allegheny County Jail, was found in Dr. Buttner's pockets.

CULVER CHIEF FAVORS CAMPS

Development of a citizenry on better social and economic levels would be achieved by operation of government training camps for idle youths, in the viewpoint of Gen. Leigh R. Gignilliat, superintendent of Culver Military Academy.

Gen. Gignilliat gave his views on the camps before making the principal address last night before the Culver Legion, alumni association, in the Hotel William Penn. Judge Frank P. Patterson also spoke.

The proposed camps would be beneficial and not detrimental to peace movements, declared Gen. Gignilliat. Citing a questionnaire sent approximately 16,000 members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at schools and universities, he said 96 per cent answered no militaristic tendency was developed. The educational value was stressed.

Baby's Cries Save Family From Fire

GREENSBURG, Pa., April 1.—(AP.)—Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Smith attribute their safety today to the cries of their sick baby after their house caught fire.

Escape by the stairway was cut off by flames, and Smith took his wife and one-year-old boy out a second story window and over the porch.

Each member of the Second Presbyterian Church, Eighth street, is expected to bring another person to church tomorrow, which is "Double Myself Sunday" in the church's loyalty crusade.

DEATH OF TWO GIRLS MYSTERY

PORTSMOUTH, O., April 1.—(AP.)—The mystifying death by poison of two young women today puzzled police seeking to determine whether they died in a "suicide pact" or were murdered.

The bodies of the women, Mrs. Dorothy White McCormick, 19-year-old divorcee, and Miss Muriel Howard, 18, were found on the bed of an apartment they had rented, but a day before.

Although there was no evidence of a struggle, a police theory of murder was strengthened by the fact the door was ajar when the bodies were found yesterday. A roomer in the building said he heard moans in the suite Thursday night.

Coroner Ross Moore, after an autopsy, said the poison that caused death might have been contained in food, candy or a beverage.

Boy, 1, Dies After Drinking Ammonia

A teaspoonful of ammonia proved fatal to Albert Oswald, of 607 Farragut street, Millvale, the coroner reported today.

The child swallowed the solution in which his mother, Mrs. Virgen Oswald, 21, had been cleaning rings, a week ago. A throat infection developed which resulted in his death early today in the Homeopathic Hospital.

Houseboat Dweller Dies Rowing Skiff

John O'Connor, 56, occupant of a houseboat on the Allegheny River near the Sixteenth Street Bridge, died last night while rowing a skiff. As O'Connor's boat began to drift down stream, Chester Forsythe, a neighboring houseboat dweller, rowed out and towed it ashore.

PRISON GUARDS, AIR RAIDERS BATTLE

Brothers Nabbed After Plane Attack on Leavenworth

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., April 1.—(AP.)—Two reputed ex-convicts from Denver were under arrest today on charges of shooting from an airplane over the federal penitentiary at tower guards who replied with machine gun and rifle fire.

Soon after the 15-minute attack late Friday had ended without casualties, Lynn and A. N. Barlow, brothers, who prison officials said once served short terms in Leavenworth for liquor law violations, were arrested as they stepped from a plane at the Fort Leavenworth flying field.

They denied the shooting, saying they flew here to get their brother, Theodore, whose term for a liquor violation ends today.

ESCAPE THWARTED

Warden Fred G. Zerbst said, however, that the evidence against the two was "conclusive" despite the fact no weapon was reported found in the cabin monoplane flown by the Barlows from Denver, starting Thursday. Zerbst pointed out the possibility of dropping firearms before landing.

The two were charged before a United States commissioner with shooting in an effort to kill persons in the prison and with attempting to aid prisoners to escape.

Warden Zerbst reported finding no immediate evidence of an escape plot within the prison, but said the charge was a logical one under the circumstances.

ARMY READY TO PURSUE

The plane attack on the prison was witnessed by Maj. Gen. Stuart Heintzelman, commandant of Fort Leavenworth, while playing golf.

Upon verifying the attack with prison officials, the General made ready to order Army pursuit planes aloft to force the attacker down. Upon seeing the plane swoop down to a landing at the post field, Gen. Heintzelman withheld the order in favor of another calling for detention of the plane's occupants.

The brothers were taken to the Wyandotte County Jail in Kansas City, Kan., where they refused to talk, other than to deny the charges. They were scheduled to appear before the Commissioner at 2 p. m. today.

ROBBERS SLAY 3 VA. MEN

LACROSSE, Va., April 1.—(AP.)—Three men were killed and one was believed mortally wounded in a robbery of a private home in Mecklenberg County, five miles south of here, last night.

The dead are Ben L. Cannon, 77, and his two nephews, Thomas W. Cannon, 56, and Bill Cannon, 28. A brother, Willis A. Cannon, 81, suffered bullet wounds in the head.

The crime was discovered shortly after daybreak today when Negro workmen went to the plantation house.

Investigation indicated the killers enticed Ben L. Cannon to the smokehouse on a pretense of buying meat. He was found shot to death in the smokehouse ashpit. His nephews evidently had given battle at the front door of the home.

Bergdoll's Brother Points Gun, Arrested

PHILADELPHIA, April 1.—(AP.)—Louis F. Bergson, attorney and brother of Grover C. Bergdoll, the draft dodger, was arrested yesterday in the business section, charged with pointing a pistol at Vincent Reckefuss and threatening to kill him.

Reckefuss, who also was arrested on a charge of breach of the peace, but won release on a copy of the charge, was quoted by police as stating he knocked Bergson down after his life had been threatened.

Helen Kane Says She Hi... Bonds From Racketeer

NEW YORK, April 1.—(AP.)—Fear of Chicago gangsters caused Helen Kane, "Boop-Boop-a-Doop" singer, to conceal her identity under an assumed name in 1930 when renting a safe deposit box for the deposit of $90,000, according to minutes of her testimony revealed today.

The Life of Samson, Strong Man of the Bible -:- CHAPTER V -:- Told in Pictures by Dan Smith

In Samson's fued with the Philistines, because he burnt their corn they killed his wife and in revenge he "smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter."

Samson's own people turning against him bound him with new cords to deliver him to his foes, but Samson broke the cords and seizing the jawbone of an ass rushed upon the Philistine warriors. "With the jawbone of an ass I have slain a thousand men," he exclaimed in triumph.

After the battle Samson was very thirsty, but God clave a hollow place in the jawbone he had used and water gushed from it.

The Philistines trapped Samson in a house in the city of Gaza and waited until daybreak to kill him, but at midnight Samson escaped from the house and calmly walked off with the gates of the city on his back.

'CROSS' TOPIC OF SERMONETTE

Deliverance Message Repeated Through Many Ages

This is the fifth in a series of Lenten sermonettes by Pittsburgh ministers under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Council of Churches. It is entitled "The Cross," and was written by the Rev. Dr. W. S. Trosh, superintendent of the Allegheny District of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

From my study window I look out against the southern sky and in the early morning and eventide three objects arrest my attention. Two are beacons on our tallest temples reared to business and the third is a cross from a neighboring schoolhouse.

During Lent I have been trying to wrest from the latter a little more of the profound truth which it symbolizes. It has repeated its old, old message for every age, that in Christ there is deliverance and liberty for enslaved humanity.

Frowns Disapproval Upon Unbelief, Pastor Says

Sin is real and serious and heaven cannot tolerate it. God's love is greater than man's sin. The cross is the proof to this most sceptical day that God cares, He loves, He redeems.

On the other hand it frowns its condemnation upon the unbelief, secularism, complacency, greed and luxury of these harrowing months. The cross puts its finger upon the eternal statute, "He that saveth his life shall lose it, but he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

And it has suggested this timely consideration: the sufferings of the men and women who walk the streets seeking employment are part of the price which must always be paid that better days might come to the social order.

Globe-Trotting

By LOUIS L. KAUFMAN

Hello, ladies and gentlemen:

Who knows, we may be able to arrange the battle of the century between a couple of 4-year-old heavyweight jigsaw puzzlers. Master Dunlap, Jr., who sets them all agog in Canonsburg, has a worthy opponent in Speedy Joe Pascarell, of South Brownsville. Joe has issued a challenge and now, if the Canonsburg entrant sets the time and place, the rest of us might get a few pointers from the way these youngsters create order out of chaos.

* * *

Even if the Monongahela River doesn't flow upstream, one trotter informs me that it is only stream flowing north. How about the Nile? But surprising as it may be, there are precious few streams, not more than five that I counted from the map, that do flow north.

* * *

More about battling birdies. This one is a redbird that flies from the apple tree in the yard of J. R. Young, of Braddock avenue, straight at its own image in the bathroom window. When it tires of the assault on that window it transfers its attention to the windows in the garage or in the neighbors' houses.

Still waiting for the story of the bird that finally conquered the glass by flying right through the window pane.

These must be some of the birds who through our bounty all winter, lived well and fattened, now undergoing spring training.

* * *

Take it or leave it. A Trotter sends in the following recipe for near-beer soup!

Simmer two quarts of near-beer with the thin rind of a lemon, a few cloves and a stick of cinnamon. Sweeten with sugar and add through a sieve the well beaten yolks of six eggs. Add half a pint of cream to the simmering mixture, stirring all the time with a wire whisk. Serve hot with toast.

This serves 8 to 10 persons. Don't try it on my recommendation, but if you want to experiment, o-kay.

Affiliated Club Reports Show Vast Amount of Worthy Achievements

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

Until one hears reports such as were given at the affiliated club day of the Congress of Clubs yesterday, it would seem almost incredible that women could be interested in so many different activities. Of the many clubs giving two-minute "highlights" of their seasons, there wasn't one that did not report at least one kind of welfare work.

Much of this was done for children—toys, milk, shoes and shoe repairing, clothing, and medical aid. Next in actual bulk of work came activities in behalf of the blind, carpet rag balls being the most generally engaged in (one club made 400 pounds), although many of the clubs had sales of articles made by the blind, too.

And there were contributions to almost every worthy institution in the city and county. Many of the clubs have and are busy with Red Cross emergency sewing. One club reported plants purchased for local thrift gardens. Another one which had held no benefit affairs, gave $100 of its dues to the Welfare Fund. Another one collected 1,450 books for the community library which it conducts. Playground work, layette-making and veteran relief were among the numerous other interests reported.

Dr. N. Andrew N. Cleven, of the University of Pittsburgh, spoke in the afternoon on "William Penn and Historic Pennsylvania," saying that Penn's most remarkable quality was his courage; he was the champion of liberty of thought. Penn wrote more than 100 books, his ablest work being "No Cross No Crown."

Only 10 per cent of motor accidents are caused by mechanical, road or weather hazards, Russell Craig told the women in his address on "Who Shall Rule Our Highways?" The other 90 per cent are caused by drivers and pedestrians. Mr. Craig enumerated the five types of drivers as the hopeful (the optimistic one who is willing to take a chance), the ignorant, the accident-prone, the careless and the thinking types. The 16 per cent that compose the accident-prone type have 60 per cent of the accidents, he stated. This is due to physiological and psychological causes.

A new setting and all stage properties will be managed by the student stage crew headed by Francis Simon, '33. Assisting him are Albert Sheats, Edward Griffiths, Edward Myers and Ned Schroeder. The art department of the high school, directed by Miss Estelle Thomas is making posters and cuts.

CHAPTER III.

As so often happens, the moments fraught with some sense of drama are dissolved in pathos. So it was with Pendie's bearding of President Hammond.

The first few minutes following her entrance resolved themselves into a confused fluster as she tried to calm the boy.

Pendie had to give all her attention to him, and, after vain efforts at reassurance, was obliged to hand him over to dumbstruck Connelly to take down to me.

When the door closed behind them Pendie turned toward the President, but it was he who spoke first. There was no inflexion of softness or affection in his tone.

"I wondered who would be the first to have the courage to defy my orders. I might have guessed it would be you."

Nerves Give Way

It was too much for Pendie, whose nerves were tensed up to face all sorts of vague and intangible fears or, at best, the contempt and invective of an angered man. This flat and dispassionate comment completely broke her self-control. Her slim legs wobbled under her and she sank down in a chair. Tears trickled silently down her flushed cheeks.

"Oh, Jud! We've been so miserable. Why did you shut us out?"

The President made no reply, but continued to stare at her in a curiously aloof and yet penetrating way. His eyes were upon her, but his mind appeared to be searching far distant horizons.

Pendie continued to talk to him. She forced a note of gaiety and gentle admonition into her words as she sketched the anxieties of his friends and colleagues.

But her artificial brightness could not continue against Hammond's flinty silence, and eventually after a few faltering sentences she ceased to talk. The President then spoke:

"Go on talking. I want to hear about things, but not the personal side. Tell me what people are saying, not about me, but about the state of the country and general political and economic conditions. Tell me, first of all, what you yourself and your friends believe the ordinary citizen is saying and thinking about the failure of Congress to handle the situation."

This was something definite, and Pendie pulled herself together and talked. The President made no comment beyond occasionally suggesting a new topic, or inquiring into some specific difficulty. His interest apparently roamed the world at large.

Pendie Surprised

Pendie's gift of vivid and succinct statement and her knowledge of foreign affairs enabled her to overcome her initial embarrassment and to talk intelligently. The President leant forward in his chair intently at the beginning, but afterwards walked slowly up and down the sun parlor. Pendie noticed with gladness that there were in his bearing no indication of weakness, either mental or physical. When the President's curiosity had been assuaged, she went up to him and laid her hand on his arm, saying:

"Jud, my dear, I'm so happy to see you all right again."

His next sentence completely smashed Pendie's world.

"Miss Malloy, you will find a notebook on the table. I want you to obtain a number of documents and books for me. Beekman can get them from the appropriate departments and I should like them in the course of the day."

Pendie moved automatically toward the table and, with unseeing eyes, groped for the notebook and sat down.

"Are you ready, Miss Malloy?"

This inquiry was the epitaph of the last four years of Pendie's life.

Her broken reply, "Yes, Mr. President," marked the beginning of a new order of things.

* * *

When Pendie entered my room her eyes were still red with tears.

I went to her and without a word led her to my easy chair. She clasped my hand tightly and I could feel her body quivering.

"Oh, Beek!" she almost wailed, "our little world has fallen to pieces—and I am—scared."

"Scared?" I asked. "Scared of what?"

"I don't know—of what. I can't—quite—explain. Let me tell you what happened upstairs and then we can talk."

I took out my pipe and listened. At the conclusion of her account of the interview with Hammond, she handed me the list of the President's requirements. It was extraordinary.

Becomes an Enigma

As head of the National Party the President was supposed to believe deeply and sincerely in its policy which insisted that the United States should hold itself uncompromisingly aloof from the European debacle and aim at regaining prosperity by the establishment of a completely self-contained and self-supporting nation. Yet what on earth did he want with this medley of covenants, pacts and protocols of almost every nation but his own? Why the surveys of the International Settlement?

"My God, Pendie!" I ejaculated. "The worst has happened. The man's gone mad."

Pendie shook her head.

"No, if anything he is terribly sane—inhumanely sane. While he was telling me of the papers he wanted I felt curiously devitalized.

"I was eerie. I could feel my legs trembling and I had a furious feeling of nausea. It may only be the aftermath of his illness—he looks dreadful—but I feel that somehow or other the change is permanent and that the man we knew is lost to us forever."

Following up this line of thought, I asked whether she felt that the altered circumstances might make it necessary for her to resign. She thought for a moment before she replied:

"No, I won't resign. Nor will you, or any of us. We may be fired for incompetence or because he has no use for us in the new scheme of things, but I tell you, Beek, there's something about him, something new and terribly strange which deprives you of volition—of any capacity to think and act for yourself. It is easier to give way than to continue fighting for your ego. You become content to serve—to serve—and wait his pleasure."

The next morning I was informed that the President was in the library and wanted to see me. He was standing by the window, and when he turned round I was shocked by his appearance.

A Changed Man

Muffled up as he had been on his return from the Fernley Mansion, I had then been struck only by his pallor and feebleness, but now I noticed that his clothes appeared several sizes too large for him. His paunch had shrunk almost out of sight. But the greatest change was in his face. His brown, rather sardonic-looking eyebrows had become completely white. His cheeks had hollowed, accentuating the cheek-bones. The folds of flesh under his chin had disappeared. His neck seemed longer and thinner.

I was conscious for the first time of the enormous strength of his jaw below the dead whiteness of his cadaverous face. The only part of him that focused attention and held you fascinated were his eyes. Deeper set in their sockets than ever, the pupils were flecked with red; they seemed like live cinders, burning, unwinking, mesmeric.

Warned by Pendie's experience, I made no attempt to reestablish the old easy familiarity which had always existed between us. To my surprise, he called me by my first name.

"Hartley, get in touch with the Secretary of State and ask him to come and see me this afternoon. Tell him that I intend resuming my job Monday, and I would like a special meeting of the Cabinet arranged for that morning at the usual hour."

New Surprises

After a few more curt instructions I returned to my room. When I picked up the telephone receiver to convey the President's message to Secretary Davis I became conscious for the first time that my hand was trembling uncontrollably.

* * *

Promptly at 10:30 Monday morning President Hammond entered the Cabinet room from the short, dark passage that separated it from his own oval office. From their places around the big mahogany table all members rose together by way of greeting.

The President bowed stiffly without speaking. With one gaunt hand he cut short personal expressions of regard at his recovery. While seats were being resumed and papers arranged, he silently scanned the faces of his department chiefs "as if he were seeing us all for the first time," as Scanlon of Labor described it to me later. The uneasy embarrassed quietness which followed was broken by the President:

"Gentlemen, I think you know my wishes. My illness has caused me to lose touch with recent developments in both domestic and foreign fields. It would help me, and help all of us, to maintain a better sense of proportion if we had a resume, not so much of immediate events, as of the position in general. . . . After which, you will perhaps be good enough to state, in greater detail, matters which lie within the province of your respective departments."

It was a grim and sorry recital which followed. One Secretary after another filled in the dark panorama:

The world outside the United States seemed to be moving toward complete and final chaos. The prosperity and glory that was Europe, by imperceptible stages, and without any violent cataclysm, was slowly fading and decaying.

The South American republics, in which so many hundreds of millions of good United States dollars had been sunk, had almost reached dissolution. In the East a long-drawn-out guerilla conflict had long since turned China into a desert of misery.

U. S. in Sorry Plight

International trade had virtually ceased, though the earth had continued to yield its increase.

Disaster had already overtaken some of the weaker states and in Europe their sullen, half-starved and communistic populations represented a potential danger which at any moment might break into open conflagration. This condition served as an excuse, if not a justification, for the maintenance of naval and military forces almost as large as those at the close of the World War.

But it was not the state of Europe or the outside world with which the Cabinet was chiefly concerned.

For reasons identical with those of other nations, the export trade of the United States had been destroyed, devastating employment in the industrial centers. The fall in commodity prices had brought want and privation to the great grain-growing areas west of the Mississippi.

In the earliest days of the economic collapse, the United States had suffered from the Midas curse and the huge mountain of gold it had collected was now but a barren rock, against which was strewn the wreckage of once prosperous and flourishing enterprises.

Doles Voted Freely

The Congress seemed to have only one idea of dealing with the problem of unemployment and that was to vote larger and larger sums to the States for local relief.

The House, closer to the people and their needs, was ready to toss aside all political pretense and establish Federal unemployment rolls, but the Senate, for form's sake, clung doggedly to the "American system" of financing the States in the enormous task of keeping millions of idle workers and farmers alive. Private charity as a source of relief had long since dried up.

Out of such sour soil had recently sprouted a new and weedy growth called the squatting movement.

Taking a leaf from the history of the early thirties, men began to mass outside the large cities and then to march in order, to array into public parks and plazas. There they literally squatted, after demanding food and shelter from the civil authorities. Most of them were unmarried and many of them carried firearms.

The country was quick to recognize the tremendous danger inherent in the squatting movement. Bloody revolutions have sprung from smaller seeds.

One Congressional group proposed buying them off with a cash allowance. A second wanted to call out the Army to annihilate them. A third talked about colonizing them in the Philippines. A fourth wanted to surrender the entire government to them.

DISTINCTIVE EVENING GOWNS DISPLAY A TAILORED EFFECT

EVENING DRESSES with collars, evening dresses that have a tailored look, evening dresses of unexpected materials like kasha or cashmere—these are among the clothes that art women seem to like best all this year.

* * *

SO UNFAMILIAR in line d color and fabric are many the new things that it is difficult to tell, at first, whether proaching gowns are deed for wear at the bridge le or the ball—particularly n the front. Their wide-ouldered look, the sports-like ay their scarf collars are caped, their button trimmings —all these details give them he appearance of anything but what they are.

* * *

IT IS ALL a part of the increased interest, among fashionably dressed women, to wear clothes that are individual. For the woman who looks well in tailored clothes, there is probably nothing more becoming than an evening dress that is cut on tailored lines.

* * *

THERE IS a definite tailored effect in the dress in today's sketch. The shoulder lines and the scarf—which begins with a buttoned-on portion, crosses the bosom, then wraps about the throat—are all reminiscent of tailored daytime frocks.

* * *

NOTE HOW the back, in spite of its deep U-shaped decolletage, has been kept, in design, in harmony with the tailored effect. The general character of the line of the dress is all the more effective in the color the designer has chosen—bright pink, belted with gold braid.

Opinions Differ About Boys Who 'Doll Up'

Do girls go in in a Big Way, for Dolled-Up Dandies?
Are Marcelled Males a treat for Modern Maidens?

Anita doesn't think they are. She'd seen a few, and she wanted to know what the world was coming to. Why on earth should men pluck their eye-brows, wave their locks and put synthetic roses on their cheeks? It was awful!

Whereupon a lad who signed himself "He-Man" snorted into the arena.

"Why shouldn't boys doll up?" he cried. "Maybe Anita doesn't like it, but most girls won't look at you unless you 'improve on nature.'"

And did the girls agree with him?

We'll let three of them tell you.

Here's Elvira with the first shot. She's all for Gents As Is. Dear Miss Robinson:

Speaking of "Great Big Beautiful (?) Painted Dolls, I think such men are nothing but disgusting sissies. Would I fall for such a creature? I hope to tell you I wouldn't! Not in a million years!

And I'll wager that any young man who appeared before his employer wearing paint, or before his family, either, or any of his decent friends, would be the laughing stock of the town.

Me for clean-shaved, broad-shouldered he-men, with no fancy fixings! ELVIRA.

But Lena, on the other hand, is offa scraggy eye-brows, and thinks the Big Boys should improve.

FAVORS IMPROVEMENT

Dear Elsie:

Well, what is wrong with a man plucking his eyebrows and fixing himself up a little? Why should a man go around with straggly eye-brows, just because he's a man, when the tweezers are so handy?

I have in mind a man or two, right now, who would be a lot easier to look at if they'd take a few tweeks at their bristling brows. They'd improve themselves, as well as give the onlookers a little more peace. He-men are all right, but do they have to be all brawn? I'll take a little polish with mine!

LENA.

And here's D. N. L., who's strong for the notion that the big boys must "sell themselves" by putting on plenty of varnish. Dear Elsie Robinson:

I've just finished reading Anita's letter about boys marcelling, painting, and eye-brow plucking.

I've just come home from Hollywood, and if little Anita thinks it's bad where she lives, she should see what I saw. The boys out there are really more beautiful than the women. Of course, that's for the movies; but lots outside the movies "improve" themselves, too.

STRONG AS EVER

Men are still as strong as ever, but they have waked up to the idea of "selling themselves" by looking as attractive as possible. Not many years ago, they paid no attention whatever to the way they looked; but someone started them doing it, and there you are.

A lot of girls will have to get over their notions of what makes a He-Man. I know lots of real He-Men, and everyone of them has his peculiar points. A couple of them do plenty of dolling-up; and one of these is a sparring partner for a boxer, too.

If a fellow isn't satisfied with his looks, why not fix them up a bit? I don't like the obvious type of dolling-up, with eye-brows like a pencil line, or a man who smells like a perfume counter. But men, as well as women, know they must "look the part" to get and hold a good job—or to make a hit socially. I think if a man can improve on nature without overdoing it, let him go ahead.

D. N. L.

So the war's still on. Want to get in on it?

How do you like your men? As is? Or scenic?

'THE GOLD DIGGER'

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

The gold-digger once had his habitat among the dazzling, hard, painted hills of the desert, or the rich mountains of the mother-ranges, pine-clad and flashing with the running water and the flight of the jay and magpie. His costume was hobnailed boots, rough trousers and shirt and a broad hat to shade his eyes. His companion was the gentle, absurd grey brother, the velvety-eared burro. "Jenny" minced along on feet as sure and dainty as any dancer's with the load of pick and food to see the gold-digger through.

Then came along another meaning of "gold-digger"—a much less kindly and more sinister one. An unbelievably avaricious and sometimes entrancingly beautiful and young figure. Relentless in the pursuit of gold as ever the forty-niner was; the city street her habitat. No lovely, innocent, open world to keep blue eyes childish even when the wrinkles came. No long, lonely days in which to grow into a sort of philosopher. Lovely clothes, metal-smooth hair, thoughts occupied with tricky twistings and turnings that never come near Heaven, and companions—from another planet from the burro Jenny. Orchids in a fox-fur instead of larkspur in a flannel shirt.

In these days of exciting "escapade," another gold-digger has sprung to the stage. From what places, I wonder, has this nineteen-thirty-three digger mined out the gold for Uncle Sam and Aunt Columbia? I'd like to know, for the pictures one could get!

Jeanette shook hers out of the bank on the closet shelf.

Annette pried her lone piece out of an ancient palm-size purse.

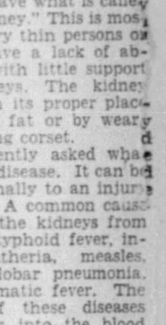
—NELL BRINKLEY.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Royal S. Copeland

Science Progressing in th Study of Kidney Disease

A few days ago I told yo about the great advances mac in the study of kidney disease It was pointed out that positive knowledge as to the condition of the kidneys can be determined by certain examinations. These include urinalysis, a study of the blood, special kidney function tests and X-ray examinaitons.



Dr. Copeland

Today, I want to tell you a little more about the kidneys. I am confident that many of my readers are not exactly sure as to where the kidneys are located and how they function. Perhaps few realize that life can continue in the absence of one kidney. Even half of one kidney can carry on the work of the body if proper care and attention are given.

As everybody knows, the kidneys are located in the back part of the abdominal cavity. Contrary to common belief, they are not placed high in the back. They are found about two inches above the crest of the hip bones, one on each side of the spine. In rare instances, babies are born with more than two kidneys and others with only one.

These important organs a about four and one-half inc in length, two inches in w and one and a half inche thickness. In the adult, aite weigh about four and one- his ounces. han

The kidneys are situated ghclose to other organs of that abdomen, but are separ on from them by a deep laye aite fat. This serves as a pro led tion against blows and other ded juries. the

Normally, the kidneys anchored in their place, and capable of little movement. all some individuals one or both for the kidneys may be move and then we have what is calle a "floating kidney." This is mos common in very thin persons o others who have a lack of abdominal fat, with little support for the kidneys. The kidney can be kept in its proper plac by putting on fat or by weary ing a supporting corset.

I am frequently asked wha causes kidney disease. It can be traced occasionally to an injury of some sort. A common cause is damage to the kidneys from scarlet fever, typhoid fever, influenza, diphtheria, measles, chicken pox, lobar pneumonia, or acute rheumatic fever. The high fever of these diseases throws poisons into the blood and when they reach the kidney damage results.

Too little attention is given to the health of the kidneys. Bear in mind that infected and diseased tonsils, diseased teeth, sinuses, and other localized infections, are a constant menace to the kidneys.

Depend on a well balanced diet with plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables. Drink at least six to eight glasses of water a day. Regular elimination assists the kidneys in ridding the body of poisonous substances. Daily bathing cleanses the ski and aids the kidneys in their work.

Contract Bridge

HOW TO PLAY and HOW TO WIN

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

Psychic Bidding

A very large proportion of the so-called "psychic" bids made at the Contract table utterly fail of their purpose. Either the opponents have nothing and the psychic bidder and his partner are landed in an undesirable contract or the hands are of such even distribution that the opponents are warned away from a dangerous contract by the psychic bid and instead inflict a penalty upon their opponents.

Take, for example, the case of a First Hand psychic, conceded by almost all players to be the most dangerous of these very dangerous psychological weapons. This was a hand played in the Eastern Pair Championship, the holder of the East hand being Mr. Michael T. Gottlieb, who has considerable skill in making psychics, but can detect his opponents' psychics with unerring accuracy. The hand was:

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ A 8 ♡ 6 5 ◇ A 4 3 2 ♣ K J 5 4 2
♠ 9 7 6 4 3 2 ♡ — ◇ K J 8 7 ♣ 9 8 7	North West East South	♠ Q ♡ A K Q 9 4 ◇ K 10 8 6 ♣ A 10 3
	♠ K J 5 ♡ J 10 8 3 2 ◇ J 9 7 5 ♣ 6

Mr. Michael T. Gottlieb

The remarkable bidding of was:

West	North	East
Pass	2 ♣ (2)	Double (3)
2 ♠	2 N T (5)	Double (6)
Pass	4 ◇ (8)	Double (9)
Pass	Pass

—A very dangerous Opening, the South player was seek- to apply his psychology not Mr. Gottlieb, but to his part- r.

2—As yet, North had no reason to suspect his partner's Opening.

3—Mr. Gottlieb, with his heart holding, had every reason to doubt South's good faith. He took the natural course of exposing the psychic by doubling the reverse bids.

4—South felt that he could not permit the Double to stand for fear that West might pass it for penalties.

5—At this point North could certainly have become slightly suspicious, but he afterwards explained that he thought Mr. Gottlieb was trying to put something over.

6—This confirmed South's psychic beyond question.

7—South again tried to wriggle off the hook. Actually, on the basis of Double Dummy play, North could have done fairly well at the contract of two notrump.

8—North still believed that Mr. Gottlieb was trying to put something over.

9—This Double is strictly for penalties.

As the hand was played, the defense was not perfect, and North and South were defeated only 2 tricks, but, on the other hand, East and West could have done nothing whatever with their cards, except possibly bid enough to have been compelled to accept a penalty either in hearts or spades.

TODAY'S QUESTION

South opens with a call of two notrump and North responds with a Takeout of three hearts. What should South now call with the following hand?

♠ A K 4 ♡ A J 4 2 ◇ A K ♣ Q 10 5 3

Answer: Four hearts. Game would appear to be practically assured at either three notrump or four hearts. However, the latter call offers a better chance of reaching a successful Slam contract if North holds more than a minimum.

Heart of a Wife

Continuation of Love's Reawakening

Wynne Assigned to Trail Mysterious Rider

Wynne sprang into action almost before Hugh Grantland had finished speaking. With a hand upon Hen-ner-y's arm he swung him toward the backward trail, and deftly ranged Nettie upon the other side of her husband.

"I get you, sir," he said. "We'll make tracks."

"Just a second, Wynne."

Hugh spoke only as the little procession was vanishing into the blackness.

"Stand still!" Wynne's command to his companions followed so quickly upon Hugh's words that I guessed Wynne had been alert for some delaying command from Hugh.

"You heard what she said about that trail, and where it leads. It must be near enough to this place for us to hear the triple hoot owl call. That will be the best one to use, for it is one these fellows have used themselves, and we will hope that they will regard it either as the real thing, or as a mystifying signal of their own.

"But do not use it unless this horseman does something which will put us in danger, or threatens to spoil our attack. If he simply goes straight to the shack, trail him as near to the house as you can get without revealing your presence.

"If he goes into the house, set the horse loose if you can manage it. Otherwise come directly to the place where young Mr. Veritzen and Brock are keeping watch. But if the horseman doesn't go to the shack, you keep with him as if you were his shadow. In that case, you probably can't take part in the attack. I'm telling you now, so you'll have time to get used to the disappointment. Sorry, old boy! Fortunes of war!"

There was in Hugh's voice an amused but distinctly sympathetic comprehension of the chagrin which would be Wynne's if he were not permitted to join forces with the other men in the attack upon the shack where Marion and Carolyn were held prisoners. I knew before the man's answer came what Wynne's reaction would be. Hugh Grantland has the rare gift of inspiring almost reverential admiration from his men.

"Thank you, Major," said Wynne, as fervently as if Hugh had given him an accolade. "I know you'd give me a break if you could. Is that all, sir?"

"Yes. Good luck!"

"Thanks again. Come along!" He spoke to his charges, and in another minute there was only the sound of retreating footsteps as evidence that they had been with us.

"Now!" Hugh managed to make the low murmured word a dynamic charge. "In the few minutes we have left, I think we'd better consider this mysterious horseman. Just as we've got everything planned perfectly, with all the lookouts eliminated and the way to the shack perfectly open, this fellow appears. What do you think, Chief?"

His tone when he addressed my father was as deferential as Wynne's had been to him.

"Frankly, I am at a loss," my father said. "Presumably this man belongs to the gang, but why he should come on horseback— What do you think, Harry?"

"It's those muffled feet that get me," Mr. Underwood said thoughtfully. "It isn't so uncommon for men to ride horseback along these mountain roads. They've been doing it in these parts for a couple of hundred years or so. But muffling a horse's feet means that his rider doesn't want his hoofbeats heard."

"This Charles Owen," Philip Veritzen struck in. "How did he travel up here?"

"In a motor car," Lee Chow answered promptly, "as far as the car would go. Then he walked. My man lost him at a fork about a half mile from the shack. There was no sign of a horse anywhere. Of course it is possible that Owen is the mysterious rider, but my judgment is against that hypothesis."

"Mine, too," Harry Underwood chimed in. "If Owen is the rider, that means he's playing a lone hand, for there's no sense of his roaming around these parts in that fashion if he's the brains behind this plan, as looks pretty certain now. But all this isn't getting us anywhere. Isn't it about time we made tracks for that place where we're to wait for the Dicky-bird?"

Party for the Bride

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1—A very good friend of ours went abroad to be married and now he is coming back with his bride, and I would like to give her a little party. In what form shall I give it? I would like to invite some of his friends and some of ours. Do they give presents?

2—Is it all right for me to greet another girl with flowers as she gets off the boat?

A READER.

1—There are many charming forms that this party might take . . . a tea on Saturday or Sunday afternoon, a buffet supper on Sunday evening (which would be an excellent form for the party), an evening of bridge or any other kind of game, or, of course, a dinner party if this is convenient, although you could invite more people to the other forms of party.

The guests would not be expected to bring presents. If they wish to send presents to this couple who were married abroad, they would probably send them before this party.

2—Yes, this is a charming gesture to make. But remember that a corsage that she could immeditely put on to wear would be better, since a bouquet of flowers means that she has one more thing to take care of during the busy minutes (or hours) of the customs inspection.

Friendship

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please help me? I met a very nice young man at a party about a week ago and he asked me if he could see me some time. I told him that I did not have a telephone and there was no way of getting in touch with me. Was it correct for me to set a certain date for his seeing me, or should he set the date?

I am invited to a party which will be held very soon. Would it be correct to ask him to go along, although he has no telephone and I do not know his address? Just what should I say in asking him to go to the party? READER.

I think that, under these indefinite circumstances, it would seem as if you were "rushing" this young man if you invite him to go to this party with you. It would be best to wait for this friendship to develop a little more gradually and naturally.

A Sensible Mother

By CONSTANCE CAMERON

The mother of 16-year-old Anne laughed long and heartily. "Golly!" she exclaimed, "I certainly am priceless as a chaperone."

The explanation of her remark concerned a short trip to a neighboring city to see a baseball game. Anne, her girl chum and two boys wanted to make the trip. Anne's mother said it would be all right, but that she wanted to drive them over and back, and added, laughingly, "to chaperone the party."

"Chaperone!" she said later. "I might just as well have been a million miles away for all the attention they paid to my presence."

It seems that on the way home Anne had a headache. She and her especial boy of the moment, with the other girl, occupied the back seat. Mother sat in front and let the other boy drive back. When Anne announced the headache the boy beside her took off her hat and nonchalantly put his arm around her. Anne cuddled down into his shoulder and so they rode home. Once in a while he stroked her hair and once in a while kissed her. Mother admitted that she was frankly embarrassed and didn't know where to look, but being the mother she is, turned to talk with them once in a while and viewed the romantic spectacle as though it happened every morning before breakfast.

"And," she ended her recital, "I was not shocked; I was complimented that they were so frank and open and took me so much for granted. I shall never aspire to be a chaperone again, but I'll enjoy going along. I'd rather they'd pet when I'm there than when they're alone."

And I, for one, think the mother's attitude is most sensible. And you mothers who may not agree with me—just sit down and think back—remember those buggy rides, remember how you sat with Dad in the dark of the church steps—and remember, too, that youth will always be youth, and that youth time is choosing and mating time—and be sensible, as Anne's mother was sensible.

A Formal Dinner

One should not arrive at the formal dinner until five or ten minutes before the time to eat. When the party starts to break up it is polite to leave with the other guests and not remain after they have left.

MRS. CHARLES H. SABIN, Women's Organization for Prohibition Reform, New Y[illegible]: My dear Mrs. Sabin—I don't like to try predicting what the history books will say, and who they will be generous to in the years to come, but I'll make a bet that you and your organization get a lot of favorable treatment. You are, I'm convinced, the only person that will be identified for nothing but your work on the sensible side of the prohibition question.

There were lots of other big people on the same side, but all of them were already distinguished figures. You, on the other hand, are one person who has crusaded with all the zeal of a true believer for just one thing, to get that crazy dry statute off the books.

A society matron a few days ago, you suddenly saw the light, and went to work and became a national figure in no time. Here's looking at you!

MR. JAMES J. WALKER, the Riviera, France: My dear Jimmy—We've had so many different and conflicting reports about you over here, that I thought I'd write you myself and get the lowdown. We've heard that you're never coming back, that you're coming back in a couple of days, that you're going to marry Betty Compton, and that you'll never marry again, etc., etc. And it's all very confusing to your friends. And don't ever feel just because you are a few thousand miles away that you haven't plenty of them left over here. There might have been a brief spell of resentment over some of your official acts, but it is all forgotten now, and I know that the mere mention of your name at most meetings and dinners is the signal for applause.

So don't get the idea that you're not missed around your old home town. If you'll take my advice, Jim, you'll quit trying to write a book about bygones, and give up that whoopee on the Riviera, and come home. I can see from your newsreel shots that you've none of that keen, eager look, and I can't believe that you're through. And I know you're not a quitter. Remember saying that the [illegible]s of public office are not to be compared to the yellows of acting?

TO THE FLORISTS TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASS'N, Detroit, Mich.: Gentlemen: Thank you again for your grand support in sending real orchids without charge, to those women I mention.

I never realized when we first arranged the plan how much happiness it would bring to some of the deserving people, no matter where they dwell. But the clippings from everywhere are just coming in relating the joy of the orchid recipients, many of whom never saw an orchid before. The fact that someone has "told the world" about them and their good deeds, of course, is what matters.

During the week of the Flower Show—editors handling my trivia picked some of their townsmen and townswomen for the honor. Over 100 cities, I believe, were included. Before me now are pictures of some little old ladies who never before "got a tumble" for their philanthropies, their sacrifices and their heroics.

It gives me quite a thrill, really. Therefore, an orchid to you!

HOLLYWOOD, April 1.

The return of Dolores Del Rio to the screen will be made as a impestuous Italian peasant girl, heroine of G. B. Stern's novel, "Modesta."

This was assured yesterday when Merian C. Cooper completed the purchase of the story, and assigned Joel McCrea to play the young English hero of the tale.

Theater men, who speak for the fans, will be glad to hear of the reunion of Dolores and Joel, for they made a great hit in "The Bird of Paradise." Matter of fact, it was the exhibitor demand for another picture with the two that caused R K O to put the Mexican star under contract again.

She will not beggin her film for a number of weeks, because Joel McCrea must first do two stories with Dorothy Jordan, "Rafter Romance" and "Little Clown Lost."

The young actor has been out of makeup for several days with a case of influenza.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., has moved into the Beverly Wilshire hotel. He'll stay there until he can take possession of his grandmother's house . . . The old feud between Jean Harlow and Howard Hughes has been completely forgotten. They were dinner and dancing partners at the Cocoanut Grove the other night . . . And that was Janet Gaynor lunching with Jimmie Dunn in the French room at the Ambassador. It was one of her few appearances with another man since her separation from Lydell Peck.

The Countess Frasso is returning to Hollywood all right. She arrives here today by airplane with Mary Pickford. So far, Josef von Sternberg has made no studio affiliations. He tells me, too, that he did not negotiate with any film companies abroad.

Father Cox Relief Show Tomorrow

Nearly 3,000 hungry men and boys were in the breadline at Old St. Patrick's yesterday noon for their daily meal. In fact this is the dismal picture that can be seen every day at Old St. Patrick's. Thursdays and Saturdays are the regular days for the distribution of baskets of food to destitute families. More than 1,200 families applied to Father Cox for aid of this kind Thursday and an equal number will be on hand today. Were it not for the several tons of supplies donated by the public at the Enright Theater benefit last Sunday, many of these families would have gone hungry.

Another movie benefit is scheduled for tomorrow at the Regal Theater, Wilkinsburg. This will be a community affair as the small capacity of the theater will not take care of others. The show, as usual, will start at 2 o'clock and run continuously until 11 o'clock and a splendid program is announced. Food only will be the requirement for admission "tickets" and today is the day to do the shopping for your "tickets" at the neighborhood grocery store. All of these food benefits are promoted through the co-operation of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

Today Father Cox will be given his regular Saturday check for commissions on account of the subscription drive he is conducting for the Sun-Telegraph. For every subscription that comes in on the blank on this page or is telephoned in with the request that Father Cox be given credit for it, brings to his unemployment relief fund a liberal cash commission.

Vaudeville Dropped By Variety

Vaudeville, for the remainder of the season, will be discontinued in the Variety. Beginning with a midnight show Sunday night, April 2, straight first-run feature pictures, news reel, selected short comedies and Mickey Mouse cartoons will be offered each week. In discontinuing vaudeville, Manager George Jaffe announced that a reduction in prices would go into effect. The admission for all matinee and evening shows will be 25 cents. Children will be admitted at all times for 10 cents.

Gabriel's Job Well Done In Penn

By GEORGE SEIBEL

Mr. Seibel

It took an archangel and Walter Huston to clean up the political mess of the United States and insure the peace of the world at the Penn Theater yesterday. "Gabriel Over the White House," based on an anonymous novel, achieved what few pictures do—it won the warm plaudits of the audience, who evidently approved of Walter and Gabriel cutting red tape and ending all rackets, while Karen Morley looks on with sympathetic wonder and Franchot Tone acts as the President's secretary and Karen's admirer.

There is really a capital idea behind this fantasy. It shows what courage and honesty could do in the office of the presidency. It would not even be necessary to leave the window open so that Gabriel can come in just by fluttering the lace curtains.

President Hammond, played by Huston, starts out as the average White House dummy, amid the mechanical laughter of his political cronies. But he goes motoring and tries to do 110 miles an hour, which results in a smash-up. At the point of death, he is restored by Gabriel moving into his body.

From that time on he solves all problems with spectacular speed. Unemployment is the first and world peace the last. In between he marshals tanks to batter down the stronghold of the racketeers who defy Uncle Sam and even shoot Karen Morley after the Eighteenth Amendment has been repealed. As he signs the Washington pact for world disarmament, he keels over and is carried off to his couch, where Gabriel makes his exit a little later.

This story, deviating considerably from the published novel, is pictured with dramatic skill and acts as powerful propaganda. Its practical appeal is shown in the response of the audiences, who are clearly for Gabriel Huston and his new deal.

There is a remarkably macabre Mickey Mouse dream cartoon comedy and a moderately dull slapstick orgy of the Taxi Boys. But with all the world's problems, from prohibition and racketeering down to unemployment and war beautifuly solved, why should anybody be interested in such minor matters?

March Came In Like Goat, But Reformed on 4th

By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

March came in like a goat, but left Democratic.

From the fourth day on we regard it as the greatest month in our history. The fur flew like a wolf biting an electric fan.

President Roosevelt showed us some card tricks in that new deal. The smartest thing was the quick bank holiday, thereby tying it up with the late unlamented Republican administration.

It happened as suddenly as an irate landlady throwing a delinquent boarder's baggage out after him. If Mr. Roosevelt had waited a week the Republicans would have been away as clean as Jack Spratt's platter.

Then the G. O. P. could have telephoned in an alibi from a safe distance and solemnly wept:

"It's too bad, but it's Democratic."

Our little man with the big ears in Washington tells us that 265 more national banks opened between March 15 and March 25. How's that for a nice string of filling stations?

It was our first March in years in which deeds were louder than words. The month was not windy.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., April 1.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

This fellow Roosevelt never gets through surprising us. We just find out now that he speaks French fluently. That's the second linguistic surprise he has handed us. The other was the night the banks closed.

Will Rogers

We knew he could speak English. But we didn't know he could talk "American" till that night. In fact, he has got three speaking accomplishments, he is the only guy who can talk "turkey" to the Senate.

Every man gets an opportunity once in a lifetime. That little country banker in New York named Morgan has his now. If he just steps up to the Senate witness stand and can show the boys where he has a business and not a racket, he can step down a hero; but if he can't, the boat sails Wednesday.

Yours, WILL.

'Y' Players to Stage 'Brief Moment'

Sunday and Tuesday evenings, the "Y" Co-Operative Playhouse of the Y. M. & W. H. A. will present "Brief Moment," by S. N. Behrman. The cast includes Dorothy Figley, Cecile Browdy, Martha Clare, Alexander Shaw, Herbert Osgood, Milt Brauman, Harold Daniels, M. Bower Maze and John Johns. "Brief Moment" is the third major production of the Playhouse season.

Marion Davies, as Peg in her new film, "Peg O' My Heart," seems a little distrustful. Also in the scene are Tyrrel Davis, Juliette Compton and Alan Mowbray. The picture is a screen adaptation of the play of the same title.

Hearts Trump In Davis

By WILLIAM T. SCHOYER

The racket's in the cards in "Grand Slam," gay film burlesque of the national parlor sport in the Davis and Sheridan Square this week. And you don't have to play bridge to understand how Paul Lukas first gives himself a new deal, then a heartache, when the game gets the upper hand and shuffles him.

Loretta Young is the girl who marries Paul when he's nothing but a cultured Russian waiter. She teaches him bridge, which he calls "a silly game," until by chance he beats an expert and invents a system. Then they're off on the path toward money—and divorce. Polished and always pretty, Loretta gives a graceful performance opposite the appealing and handsome Paul. Frank McHugh provides the comedy. A championship bout, where hearts, of course, are trumps, brings the final climax.

Jack Holt has a he-man part building a jungle railroad in the second feature, "When Strangers Marry." The perverse Lillian Bond, whom he meets, spanks and marries, all in one drunken Paris night, gets a bit tired waiting for her husband in an outpost of civilization and plays into the hand of a villain who is planning to blow up her husband's works. When she finds out the truth, the shooting begins and there's a fine running jungle fight. And Jack's always fun in a fight.

Miss Hepburn In Warner

By MARY SHINE

Katharine Hepburn is a boon to the screen with her natural, rather breezy and altogether capable acting, and direct, almost clipped manner of speech. She does a splendid characterization of Lady Cynthia in "Christopher Strong," showing in the Warner this week, playing opposite Colin Clive, as Sir Christopher Strong.

It is not a happy picture, but rather a fine one, though overly-dramatic at moments, about an English family, thoroughly steeped in their typical respectability, with the exception of a giddy young daughter, Billie Burke plays the plaintive Lady Strong.

When Lady Cynthia, a famous aviatrix, with no time for anything but love of life and her flying, meets Sir Christopher for the first time, she falls in love for the first and last time. It is the beginning of a bitter-sweet affair between them, with Sir Christopher unwilling to tell his wife, or ruin his career with scandal, and Lady Cynthia too much in love to give him up.

On Cynthia's crest is graven "Courage conquers death," and even love, she decides, and prepares to make a dangerous altitude flight with the intention of committing suicide.

Broadways of the World
All in a Day
By Mark Hellinger

ABOARD THE S. S. RESOLUTE, INDIA-BOUND:—A strange thing happened aboard this boat three years ago. Maybe you read about it in the papers at the time. I think it worth repeating . . .

Ethel Smith—wrong name used intentionally—was 27 years of age. She was quiet, unassuming, blonde and decidedly pretty. Just before the boat sailed, a few of the passengers noticed a strange scene that took place upon the dock in New York.

"No use making a scene," they heard the woman say.

She was talking to a man who was quite a bit older than she. He was tall and thin; almost gaunt.

"Please, please," he kept repeating. "We can patch it all up. If you go it will be the end. The baby is so young. You don't have to do it for me. Just do it for him. Please don't go. Please."

The woman was biting her lip.

"You should have thought of this long before now. I do not love you any more, and you are wasting your time."

She turned rapidly and walked up the gangplank. The man shuffled from the pier, his head down . . .

For almost a month, while the cruise progressed, Ethel Smith remained a woman of mystery. By this time, of course, that strange scene at the gangplank had been repeated many times by practically every passenger on the voyage.

But at the end of the month Ethel Smith made her first mistake. Possibly she was lonely and possibly any of us might have done the same thing. Anyhow, it was a mistake. She sat on deck with another woman one night and told her the whole story.

It was a simple tale, and one that happens every day in the week. The tall man on the dock had been her husband. They had lived together for almost eight years. Four years ago a baby boy had been born. Ethel Smith had wanted a girl.

Things had never seemed to go quite right after that. Ethel Smith had decided upon a nurse for the child; her husband thought that she should have cared for the child herself. They began to quarrel and to bicker and to argue.

There was a separation agreement, in which the husband was given the custody of the child. But the woman had tired of that and she had sued for a complete divorce. An interlocutory decree had been granted shortly before the boat sailed, but Ethel Smith would have to wait about three months before everything was final.

Meanwhile, although the husband had been wise enough not to contest the divorce, he was growing more and more desperate as the time went by. He knew now for a certainty that Ethel Smith was the only girl he had ever loved, and that she was the only woman he would ever love. He did everything in his power to bring her back to him—but it was no use.

There was a Swiss chap on board—young, handsome, personable. He hadn't been with the cruise since the beginning; he had boarded the boat at Athens. He had discovered Ethel Smith. She had discovered him.

Ethel Smith, who knew for a certainty that love is the bunk, fell madly in love with the boys. And the boy? Well, you couldn't blame him very much. The nights sometimes grew very long on a cruise, and Ethel Smith was very pretty. So why not?

She grew more and more serious, and he grew more and more frightened. So, eventually, he took the easiest way out. Just before the boat neared Siam, he had himself sent a cable that called him back to Switzerland immediately.

And so, when he arrived in Bangkok, he stayed in Bangkok while Ethel Smith and the rest of the party returned to the boat. Then he went back to Switzerland as rapidly as possible. He never saw Ethel Smith again.

The story ends very rapidly, somewhere between Pak Nam, in Siam, and Singapore, in the Straits Settlements. Ethel Smith visited the ship's doctor and obtained several pills to make her sleep.

But she evidently wanted a longer sleep than the pills could give her. Because when they forced her cabin door the next day the porthole was wide open and Ethel Smith was gone. She is still gone. She will always be gone.

And I'm willing to bet that—as she took the fatal plunge—a tall and thin man gave vent to a hysterical laugh far, far away . . .

Il Duce Seen On Screen

THE GLOBE TROTTER

First pictures of the historic peace meeting between Ramsay MacDonald, British Prime Minister, and Premier Mussolini, of Italy, are contained in the current issue of Hearst Metrotone News. After both have posed, Premier MacDonald expresses his gratification over the results of his visit.

Unusually early and gigantic icebergs are traveling southward, menacing the trans-Atlantic ship lanes. Scenes show coast guardsmen blowing up the smaller floes with shell fire. There is a graphic description by the Globe Trotter.

From Washington come pictures of Miss Sylvia Deane, the youngest woman lawyer ever admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court. She is only 25, and pretty.

In a furious and thrilling contest, the New York Rangers and the Canadiens fight for hockey honors in Madison Square Garden, New York. The Rangers win by 5 goals to 2.

A big circus moving from its winter quarters at Peru, Ind., provides plenty of thrills and excitement.

The dog racing craze has hit Australia. Exciting contests are pictured between the fast little whippets.

Gigantic Ape Runs Amuck In Stanley

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"King Kong," [illegible] to be classed as an achievement [illegible] the movies, is the highly [illegible]resting and dramatically st[illegible] film in the Stanley. An a[illegible]poid ape as large as a hous[illegible] the central character. The ape and Fay Wray have practically all the acting honors. And since Miss Wray spends most of her time screaming in a huge paw of the "animal," maybe all the credit belongs to it. No, on second thought, the real stars of the picture do not appear in it at all. They are the engineers and technical men who made it possible to impart animation to mechanical contrivances that recreate prehistoric reptiles, and this monster gorilla, and make them appear to live and fight on the screen.

It is all about a movie crew that goes to an island inhabited by blacks who seem too primitive to make plausible their evident engineering skill in erecting a huge wall that separates their village from the rest of the island. Behind the wall dwell "King Kong" and the giant lizards. The natives capture Miss Wray and dispose of her on Kong's side of the wall to keep the monster good natured. And, of course, it has to be rescued, and that means a lot of grief and excitement. By means of a gas bomb the giant is overcome and is taken to New York as "the eighth wonder of the world."

On the night he is to be shown for the first time he breaks his chains and escapes. He tears up a section of the elevated and wrecks a train. Ascending a building, he spies Miss Wray in a room and captures her again, climbing with her to the top of the Empire State Building. Four airplanes shower him with machine gun bullets. He plucks one from the air and sends it crashing to the street. Lead eventually conquers him.

Hokey as it all sounds, it is made to appear real—and that is the marvelous thing about this film, which undoubtedly is the greatest novelty ever to come out of Hollywood.

Robert Armstrong and Bruce Cabot have the principal male roles.

SALE OF PITTSBURGHERS STIRS FANS

THE BALTIMORE CLUB, of the International League, not only went through with the proposal to sell Bill Regan, resident of this city and ex-Pirate, to Montreal for cash, but caused a stir by selling another Pittsburgher, Frank Packard, to Jersey City in the same circuit. Both Regan and Packard were warm favorites in Baltimore, and the sale of the two Pittsburghers has brought a vigorous protest from the fans.

Frank Packard

The policy of the management is being bitterly criticized in letters to the newspapers, some of the patrons going so far as to declare that they will attend no more games at Oriole Park. Commenting on the situation, Rodger H. Pippen writes in the Baltimore News: "Parting with favorites in baseball usually brings more or less resentment from the customers. The choice between Heinie Sand and Bill Regan for the utility infield job was difficult to make, but everything considered, this move will meet with the approval of the majority of the patrons. It was different with Packard. He was an athlete with a lot of color, plenty of spirit, and, while a streak hitter, was a hard man to get out when in his stride. He will be missed."

JOHNNY MORRISON is only a memory in the major leagues, but if you'll take the word of Marty McManus for it his great curve ball has come back, a rookie left-hander being the owner of it this time. According to McManus, Allen Jones, college recruit with the Red Sox, has a regular jug-handle hook.

Jones' curve ball, it is said, does not merely break, but actually explodes, like the right-hand variety with which Morrison used to baffle the Pirates' opponents. Jones has control, poise and assurance, too, and McManus rates him the best college southpaw he ever saw.

YOUNG FRED WALKER has given Joe McCarthy a new outfield problem. The Yanks have five other fly chasers in Ruth, Combs, Chapman, Byrd and Cooke. Pilot McCarthy doesn't want to carry more than five, but Walker looks too good to be dropped.

There is a chance that Walker may be retained and that, like Hoag, Cooke will be crowded off the roster. Walker is a son of Dixie Walker, former pitcher, and has been given the same nickname.

ONE BASEBALL MAN who is no booster for Babe Ruth is John McGraw. "Ruth didn't make baseball," the former Giant manager declared. "Baseball made Ruth. That's why I say he was an ingrate for holding out for $52,000 when he isn't worth it. Ruth isn't half the ball player Lou Gehrig is, and he hasn't been for years, and I think their relative salaries are all out of line. If Ruth were worth $52,000, wouldn't you say that a really great ball player like Frankie Frisch should get at least half as much? I'll admit Ruth has color. He has been a good player and a good drawing card, but not by any means the card he thinks he is. I know for a fact that the Yanks have played to a $57 gate in St. Louis with Ruth in the lineup. It still takes 18 men to make a ball game, and Ruth is only one man."

Jimmy Wilson

BILL M'KECHNIE keeps the most complete book in the majors on pitchers and hitters. Each morning before the game he drags out his little book, finds out in detail what his pitchers did in previous tilts with the club to be met that day, and makes his selections and gives his instructions accordingly.

Whether or not he got the idea from McKechnie while playing under Bill in St. Louis, it develops that Catcher Jimmy Wilson, of the Cardinals, also keeps a book. Other backstops laugh at the notion, but Wilson insists it has helped him a lot in keeping tabs on the batters.

"A CATCHER MUST know what enemy batters can hit, and that's where the book comes in handy," Wilson explains. "I can recall pulling out the book and showing our pitcher where I was right in playing the percentage on a hitter.

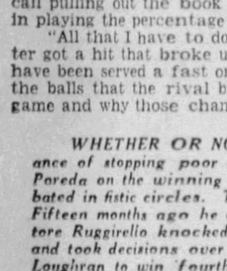
"All that I have to do is to look in the book and see where a batter got a hit that broke up the game on a curve ball when he should have been served a fast one. I write down the pitchers on both sides, the balls that the rival batters hit, the changes of players during a game and why those changes were made."

WHETHER OR NOT the by no means remarkable performance of stopping poor old Tom Heeney is going to put Stanley Poreda on the winning road to stay is a question now being debated in fistic circles. This is the third time Poreda has come up. Fifteen months ago he appeared to be going places, when Salvatore Ruggirello knocked him out. Stanley started another climb and took decisions over Primo Carnera, Ernie Schaaf and Tommy Loughran to win fourth place in the heavyweight standing, but then he gave Schaaf a return match and a haye sent him back down the ladder. Now the Jersey City Pole is up again, but whether he'll go very far is a question. He has acquired a lot of class under the tutoring of Joe Jeannette, can box and punch, but usually at the critical moment his chin fails him.

DOZENS OF PROMINENT college football players have gone in for wrestling after graduating in recent years, and the financial lure of the mat game is now drawing some of the big boys from the gridiron even before they have completed their college careers. The latest is Johnny Wood, stalwart guard on the varsity eleven of the University of California at Los Angeles.

Wood has left school despite the fact that he had another year of eligibility in football, and he intends to spend the next couple of months getting in trim before seeking any matches. He is of mammoth proportions, scaling 220 pounds in condition. Besides playing football, he was a member of the college wrestling team.

THE HIGH SPOT of the winter horse racing season will be reached tomorrow in the running of the Agua Caliente Handicap on the closing day of the meeting at Agua Caliente track in Mexico. It is a delayed running, as the track was closed for 15 days on account of the bank holiday. The meeting opened on Christmas.



Joseph M. Schenck

Like everything else in sports, the value of the big handicap has tumbled with the times. When it was run at Tia Juana as the Coffroth Handicap it was worth $92,700 in 1928, and $98,250 in 1929. Shifted to Agua Caliente in 1930, it rose to $98,400, and then it started to fall. Last year the value was $50,000 and for this year's race it has been cut to $25,000.

THE FAVORITE IN the starting field tomorrow at Joseph M. Schenck's track will be Gallant Sir, the big 4-year-old son of Sir Gallahad III. Gallant Sir was quoted some time ago at 2½ to 1, but four straight victories brought his price down to 1 to 3. Though he looks like the class of the field, the tradition of the race is against the first choice, as in 14 years the border classic has been won by the favorite only four times. Last year the winner was the ill-fated Phar Lap, Australian wonder horse, which died soon afterward. Pillow Fight, a brother of Phar Lap, had promised to figure this year, but he blew up. The disappointing showing of Pillow Fight in this country is attributed to the fact that he did not stand the long trip from Australia nearly as well as did Phar Lap. Pillow Fight lost 150 pounds during the ocean voyage.

VICTORY TENTH IN ROW FOR LIGHT BLUES

PUTNEY-ON-THAMES, England, April 1.—(AP.)—Cambridge today won the 85th annual boat race from Oxford for its tenth straight victory, setting a new competitive record for the century-old rivalry.

The Dark Blues put up a much more bitter fight than had been expected, and held a slight lead early in the race.

As a result of winning the toss and choosing the Surrey side of the river, Cambridge was favored with more calm water than Oxford at several spots on the course.

Despite inclement weather, thousands of fans turned out for the crew classic.

Charles (Chuck) Mahovlich, backfield ace for the Charleroi High School Cougars for the last three years, has decided to enroll as a student in the University of Pittsburgh, and will be a candidate for the Panther freshman team next fall.

One of the best prospects ever developed by Coach Steve Stepanian, popular Charleroi High School mentor, Mahovlich should prove himself a star for the Panthers.

Playing in the class AA competition of the W. P. I. A. L., Mahovlich ranked as one of the outstanding halfbacks in the school circuit during the 1932 campaign. He is a fine broken field runner, being one of the fastest men on the Charleroi High School. Two years ago he was named all-W. P. I. A. L. halfback by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

The members of the South High School basketball team are in Philadelphia today to attend the state championship battle between Altoona and Lower Merion. The trip to the Quaker City was made in autos furnished by the members of the faculty. South was eliminated in the semi-finals by Altoona.

The Greensburg High School athletic authorities have announced the withdrawal of the school from track and field competition.

CANUCK COURT STARS MOURNED

WINNIPEG, Man., April 1.—(AP.)—Winnipeg today mourned the loss of two of her greatest amateur basketball players.

Fans who followed the fortunes of the Winnipeg Toilers, thrice basketball champions of Canada, were shocked by word of the plane crash yesterday near Neodesha, Kan., that took six lives, including two ace players of the Toilers squad, and injured every other man on the famous Manitoba team.

The two youngsters killed, Mike Shea and Joe Dodds, were leading scorers of the team.

Before orders of the day were called in the Manitoba Legislature yesterday, the House passed a resolution of condolence with families of the Toiler players.

Thanks, Arky

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF YESTERDAY: AMERICA'S DEAN OF MEDICINE—Dr. Eddy, referred to as America's oldest practicing physician, was born in Wynhall, in 1833. It was a desire to minister to the needs of the soldiers in the Civil War that led Dr. Eddy to the adoption of his vocation in which he was active for 67 years, down to his death on March 3, 1933. THE TURNTABLE—The Frozen Turntable consisted of a circular block of ice 100 feet in diameter which formed in one of the tributaries of the Connecticut River between White River Junction and Windsor, Vermont. It turned round and round in a whirlpool of the stream, making a complete revolution every 20 minutes. In its unceasing whirl, the Turntable was a picturesque phenomenon of the Vermont winter.

FOWNES SECOND AT PINEHURST

PINEHURST, N. C., April 1.—(AP.)—The field of more than 100 competitors prepared for the second 18 holes of qualifying play in the annual North and South amateur tournament today faced with the tough task of overtaking George T. Dunlap, of Long Island, who yesterday put together rounds of 33-32 for a sparkling 65, seven strokes better than was turned in by James A. Fownes, of Pittsburgh. Dunlap's score was an amateur record for the course.

Fownes was in second place with 36-36—72, one over par, and one stroke back of him came Jimmy Robbins of Philadelphia, and Tommy Goodwin, Monroe, N. Y., with scores of 39-34—73.

Only 20 of the entries broke 80 yesterday. The day was clear, but a brisk wind swept over the course at times. The low 32 today will be paired in match play for the championship, which will be decided in a 36-hole match next Friday.

R. G. Morrison, of Pittsburgh, finished in a tie with three others with a 79.

GIANTS DROP SOUTHWORTH

FORT WORTH, Tex., April 1.—Billy Southworth has been dropped as coach by the New York Giants.

The veteran, who has served in the National League as a player, manager and coach, was handed his release yesterday. The reason given for his dismissal was that a knee injury he sustained several days ago had failed to heal properly. A successor is to be named today.

Baseball Briefs

MIAMI, Fla.—(AP.)—Manager Max Carey will carry 35 Dodgers north with him but the axe will start swinging soon. It looks now as though jobs have been clinched by Pitchers Clark, Beck, Mungo, Benge, Carroll and Thurston; Catchers Lopez and Sukeforth; Infielders Wright, Judge, Bissonette, Cuccinello, Stripp and Flowers, and Outfielders O'Doul, Wilson, Taylor and Frederick.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal.—(AP.)—After being shifted around from one position to another it looks as if Red Kress will return to his first love, shortstop, in the Chicago White Sox lineup.

TAMPA, Fla.—(AP.)—A foot infection becoming more painful, Dernie Bush, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, has left for Cincinnati for treatment, while Coach Jewel Ens took charge of the team.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(AP.)—Joe McCarthy still has 12 days in which to decide just who will play shortstop for his New York Yankees but he admits he's stumped right now. Bill Warbertarmer Duke University star, apparently had the job clinched a week ago but McCarthy has been using Frank Crosetti in recent exhibition games and intimates it's still a wide open battle between the two.

BRUIN SKATERS NEAR VICTORY

TORONTO, Ontario, April 1.—(AP.)—Needing only one mort victory to enter the Stanley Cup finals, Boston's Bruins battle the crippled Toronto Maple Leafs, cup holders, in the fourth game of the play-off series between the first-place teams of the National Hockey League here tonight.

Boston has won two of the first three games of the best-three-out-of-five series, leaving Toronto with the difficult task of winning both of the last two games in order to remain in the running. All three games so far played have gone into overtime.

While the Bruins and Maple Leafs are meeting here, the Detroit Red Wings and New York Rangers will be marking time in preparation for their deciding battle for the other position in the finals tomorrow night at Detroit.

The Rangers hold a two-goal advantage over the Wings.

P. I. A. A. TITLE FRAY TONIGHT

PHILADELPHIA, April 1.—The 1933 Pennsylvania state scholastic basketball championship will be settled tonight as the crack Lower Merion and Altoona fives meet here in the final round of the annual P. I. A. A. championship tournament.

Altoona, western sectional champ, won the right to meet the Lower Merion passers by eliminating South High School, of Pittsburgh, District VIII and Pittsburgh city titleholder, at State College Tuesday night.

Lower Merion advanced to the final round by beating Scranton Tech.

VAUGHAN HITS HOMER TO BEAT CUBS, 6-5

By CHARLES J. DOYLE
Staff Correspondent

LOS ANGELES, April 1.—Manager George Gibson and other veteran members of the Buccaneer family today were convinced that the lamentable condition of the Pittsburgh pitching staff was looking up.

Heinie Meine, slated to face the Cubs this afternoon; Remy Kremer, Waite Hoyt and Steve Swetonic, all are much closer to form than they were one week ago while the team was flopping all over the place.

Meine has nearly everything a pitcher needs to win consistently, and this statement need not be altered even if the Cubs hammer the veteran today. Heinie has arrived with lots of zip, and hence is far ahead of the Meine who held out until after the season of 1932 had started.

HOYT SHOWS CLASS

Hoyt pitched like a champion against the Cubs yesterday. Waite reeled off eight fine rounds, his effort being more impressive than the box score indicates. Throughout the game, Hoyt contended that Umpire Johnson missed strikes on the corner. Smart pitches Waite wanted called strikes were ruled as balls and this lease provided the opportunity for some of the hits and runs made by the Cubs.

Arky Vaughan smacked a two-run homer over the right field wall in the eighth to win the game for the Pirates, 6 to 5. Two were out and Suhr was aboard when Arky cow-tailed one. Hal Smith pitched the last inning and held the Cubs.

BUCS TAKE LEAD

The Pirates jumped on Southpaw Richmond in the first as they scored four runs. Jensen opened the attack with a homer into the right field seats. Woodie subbed for Lloyd Waner, who has a lame leg.

Manager Grimm, of the Cubs, injured his ailing back sliding into second. Hartnett did not hit on a hit-and-run effort and Grimm dove. He was replaced by Hendrick. Grimm was later taken to a physician for treatment.

Chilly Sauce

In English, Jurges and Bill Herman, the Cubs have three infield ball hawks.

Jurges is not considered a high-grade hitter, but most of the Pirate sharpshooters are his cousins. He can whack the ball over the Forbes Field fence al la Hornsby.

Manager Grimm is in sore straits for a competent lefthander, but the Cubs were able to win the flag last year without a first-rate southpaw.

Herron to Speak At Dukes' Fete

John S. Herron, Pittsburgh's new Mayor, will address the gathering at Webster Hall basketball banquet at the P. A. A. next Tuesday night.

Other speakers include the Very Rev. J. J. Callahan, president of the University; the Rev. Michael J. Brannigan, vice president; the Rev. Eugene McGuigan, Patrick Cronin and Coaches Elmer F. Layden and Charles R. Davies.

Paul G. Sullivan will serve in the capacity of toastmaster.

BASEBALL COMEDY

—By NICK ALTROCK—

Nick Altrock

ATLANTA, Ga., March 31.—One of the big press associations recently cast asparagus at the heft of my eating ability, especially when the grub is at the expense of the club. I want to deny I am a gourmand. Yep, that's what they call me—and I think "gourmand" is Spanish for pig.

Anyway, I am very modest when I have a napkin tucked under my chin. If there is clear soup and thick soup on the bill, I take both, so as to get just the right consistency. That's because I am always a consistent eater.

If there are three kinds of meat available, I order three kinds, because I am a technocrat and do three men's work. For dessert I usually start with cottage pudding, as I think the small home owner should be encouraged in times like these. Then I ask for pie and ice cream and have them merged.

I usually drink three or four cups of coffee to cement our friendly relations with Brazil. I hope this clears up the adverse remarks on my eating. And, in conclusion, I want to announce that I always leave a dime tip when I haven't a nickel handy.

FOUR CHAMPIONS WIN IN A. M. A. TITLE RING TOURNEY

SEVEN BATTLES WIND UP IN KNOCKOUTS

By JESS CARVER

The decks will be cleared for semi-final firing in the annual senior A. M. A. amateur boxing championship tournament in the Keystone A. C. ring tonight as the peppery simon-pures sock their way through the third night of competition. The semi-finals and finals will be run off Monday night.

Another capacity crowd sat through a 20-bout program last night, saw seven knockouts recorded, four champions win and two lose as the heavyweights, 175, 160 and 147-pounders went at it, throwing both punches and, too often, caution to the winds.

CROVATTA DRAWS BYE

Those who turned out to see the celebrated Charley Crovatta, defending 147-poung king, and a member of the United States Olympic team last summer in action, were disappointed, for Charley drew a bye and will not draw on a glove until tonight. The champions who fought and won included Dutch Weir, junior heavyweight king; Jack Shricker, of Pitt, Intercollegiate Conference 155-pound champ; Eric Bredl, junior 160-pound ruler, and Art (Tarzan) McGivern, the junior 147-pound champ.

A champion went toppling in the entry first bout of the evening when Buck Makrum, of Uniontown, the heavyweight ruler, was well beaten by Nick Maloy, of the Dan Billick Club. The second champion to lose was rangy George Luppinacci, of the Willow Club, who was knocked cold in the second round by the heavy-fisted George Bittner, of the Pleasant Valley A. C. in the 175-pound class.

As a result of the two nights of action, the Willow Club has advanced 10 boxers past the first round; the J. L. Thomas Club five and the Y. M. H. A., Center A. C., of Weirton, four each; Monon Valley A. C. and the Pleasant Valley A. C. three and a string of other clubs one or two apiece.

ACTION FASTER

There was a bit more action and pepper to last night's scrapping than there was to Thursday's. Several of the bouts had the boys standing on their chairs. Shricker, the agile Pitt socker, turned in a classy performance in whipping Sandy Todd, a rugged citizen from the Patton A. C., in three rounds. Shricker scored heavily with his right to the body.

Clever Al Quaill left-handed Joe Jefferies, of the Willow Club, to defeat in another good bout, and Louie Cerar, of the Patton A. C., and Joe Walker, unattached, staged a four-knockdown affair that Cerar won, at least the judges thought he'd won, but the crowd thought different. The fans and referee also disagreed with the judges in their decision in Charley Robinson-Joe Vargosky 160-pound class bout. The sprightly Robinson looked to be as far ahead as from here to Pago-Pago, but Joe got the nod.

Jimmy Campbell, Y. M. H. A. Adonis, threw a flock of right-handed punches at Walter Marm, of the Pittsburgh Lyceum, for two rounds and then shifted to a left-handed attack to win the decision in a good bout.

HEFERN SCORES K. O.

Arden Hefern, of Oil City, who recently beat Crovatta at catch-weights, turned in a neat, if not gaudy, job of putting away another of the Makrum family in a 160-pound bout. Arden, who moves in and out easily and boxes well, drilled young George, brother of the deposed heavyweight champion, with a pair of rights in the second round and it was all over.

Dutch Weir, the junior A. M. A. heavyweight champion, came dangerously close to joining the ranks of the eliminated in his bout with the unorthodox, to say the least, Beno Orben, of McDonald.

The summary:

147-pound class—Tarzan (Art) McGivern, Willow Club, defeated John R. Fulton, Homestead (technical knockout), second round. Time, 1:46. Richard Ambrose, J. L. Thomas Club, defeated Freddie Lee, Pleasant A. C., in three rounds; Jimmy Campbell, Y. M. H. A., defeated Walter Marm, Pittsburgh Lyceum, three rounds; Frank McLaughlin, McKeesport, defeated George Peirsilah, Willow Club, three rounds. 160-pound class—Al Quaill, Y. M. H. A., defeated Joe Jefferies, Willow Club, in three rounds; Vince Brownine, Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., defeated Steve Levandowski, Y. M. H. A., in three rounds; Charley Jefferson, Hub A. C., Oil City, knocked out George Makrum, Sands A. C., Uniontown, first round. Time, 1:59. Joe Vargosky, Sands A. C., Uniontown, defeated Joe Robinson, Hub A. C., Oil City, in three rounds; Jack Schricker, University of Pittsburgh, defeated Andy Todd, Patton A. C., Finleyville, in three rounds; Louis Cerar, Patton A. C., Finleyville, defeated Joe Walker, Erie, in three rounds; Eric Fred, Willow Club, defeated Eddie Schafer, Burke A. C., McKeesport, in three rounds; John Patrick, Frawley A. C., by a technical knockout in the first round. Time, 1:44.

175-pound class—Woodrow White, Bowles-ville A. C., Kittanning, defeated Eddie Nicholas, Superior A. C. (technical knockout), in the second round, towel tossed in by seconds; Ben Lysack, Center A. C., Weirton, knocked out Floyd Wolfe, Monon Valley A. C., third round 44 seconds; George Bittner, Pleasant Valley A. C., New Salem, knocked out George Luppinacci, Willow Club, second round. Time, 1:47.

Heavyweight—Glenn Busick, Jr., Center A. C., Weirton, defeated John Petro, Monon Valley A. C. (technical knockout), in the second round. Time, 1:32. Nick Maloy, Dan Billick A. C., defeated Buck Makrum, Sands A. C., Uniontown, in three rounds; Johny Ochs, Willow Club, defeated Joe Yavonshanski, Pleasant Valley A. DORMONT SEEKS EDDIE BAKER

By TOM BIRKS

With the transfer of Soapy Heyl, of Dormont, into the ranks of the Book nine, it is reported that Manager George Falconer is hot on the trail of Eddie Baker, former Pitt football star, to play center field for Dormont this season. Baker played with Art Rooney for the North Siders last season.

Dormont is likely to run into competition. Baker and Rooney are great pals. Rooney is to play with Ottie Cochran at Pleasant Valley this summer, and seeing that Cochran also is keen upon having the former Pitt star in his lineup, Baker may decide to play at Wilson avenue.

There is a letter for Leo Carroll at the sports desk, and also one for Jacobs, the former Oakland outfielder. Regarding Carroll, it seems that Manager Falconer is once again going to have trouble signing his pitching ace this season.

Carroll is getting many offers, but after many years of toiling at Dormont, it is quite possible that Leo will remain there.

CARRICK WINS SWIM TITLE

The city high school swimming laurels today rest in the coffers of Carrick and Latimer, the former holding the senior title and the latter the junior.

In the annual title meet yesterday, the Carrick team piled up 20 points, two more than were recorded by the South squad. Allegheny was third with 14; Langley fourth with 12 and Taylor Allerdice fifth with 11. Schenley, the defending champion, wound up in sixth position.

In the junior division, Latimer more than doubles its point score over the second place team, Latimer registered 25 points to 12 for Fifth Avenue; 10 for Langley; nine for Arsenal and Carrick; six for Allerdice; five for South and Baxter and three each for Westinghouse, Perry and Herron Hill.

The senior 100-yard free style event will be staged again next Tuesday in the Connelley pool. In the final yesterday, the finish was marred by an unintentional foul and in the excitement the timers failed to clock one of the contestants.

Former Memphis Star Killed in Auto Wreck

FLINT, Mich., April 1.—(AP.)—Howard (Lefty) Donnell, 33, of Flint, former pitcher for the Memphis baseball team, of the Southern Association, was killed and three other persons were critically injured when an automobile driven by Donnell sideswiped a truck and then crashed head-on into another truck on the Dixie highway, nine miles south of here, at 2 a. m. today. Poor visibility due to fog caused the crash.

The injured, Glenn Bennett, 36, also of Flint, and two young women, were unconscious in a local hospital, all believed to have fractured skulls. Charles Heemstra, Detroit, driver of the second truck, was slightly cut and bruised. Harvey La Rose, Bay City, Mich., was driving the other truck.

Between Rounds

Jack Wilson and Anson Green, local middleweights, will box a return bout of six rounds in the semi-final to the repeat number between Johnny Datto and Johnny Chiodo under the auspices of the American Legion in Johnstown next Thursday night. Charley Blozevich and Dominic Mancini are in another preliminary.

The card has been completed for the Tommy Paul-Jackie Wilson show at Motor Square Garden Monday night with the signing of Edoardo Duarry, of Erie, and Marty Meisale, of McKeesport, for the second six-round bout. Carl Montebanne and the Alabama Kid are in the eight-round semi-final. Nat Litfin and Charley Burns in the first six-rounder and Johnny Hatel and Tommy Harris in the four-round opener.

Ted Yarosz will be in the main bout at the Garden one week from Monday night if the club can secure an opponent for him.

Bob McCormick denies he was knocked out by Joey Bazzone, as claimed in Bazzone's record. He says he lost a six-round decision to Bazzone in his first professional fight in which he broke his left hand during the third round.

COX GETS WIN OVER FALCO

By HARRY KECK
Sports Editor.

Matchmaker Lew Raymond, of the Arena, on the North Side, today knows at least two good arguments against allowing 15-round fights in the State of Pennsylvania.

One of them is Tracey Cox, of Indianapolis, and the other one is Tony Falco, of Philadelphia.

They "fought" 10 rounds, which seemed 100 rounds, in the main bout last night, with Cox winning every one of them. That is to say, the fighting consisted of Cox stalking his man and Falco imitating Paavo Nurmi in the Finn's palmy running days. Along about the seventh round the fans began to think of Sunday sports, the new beer law and other things (you know how it is), and began to turn to their blueprints to find the way out.

FALCO ON BICYCLE

As the lights went out for the start of the final round, there was some confusion in one of the aisles. For a moment it looked like the start of a riot, but it turned out to be nothing more or less than the unsuccessful attempt of somebody to keep some of the folks from going out. They had paid to get in and they thought they had a right to go out when they felt they had had enough, and you couldn't blame them.

The trouble with the fight was that Cox showed Falco he could hit in the first round, when he dropped him for no count with a looping right to the jaw. Immediately, Tony sent for his bicycle, roller skates and running togs and prepared to race it out on that track if it took all night, just so he stayed the 10 rounds. He was down for no count in the fourth and for nine and no count in the fifth, and Cox caught up with him on other occasions, but couldn't finish the job.

STRICTLY A PUNCHER

Tracey demonstrated that, so far as he himself is concerned, he is strictly a puncher who has to get a lot of socks at your jaw while you're standing still, or he'll put the customers to sleep instead of the gent he is being paid to lure into slumberland. There has been some talk of matching him with Tony Herrera if he won last night. He won, all right, and all off by himself, but was so unimpressive in doing it, aside from the few times he hurt Falco and then let him get away, that it will take a gang of those well-fed brewery steeds to drag in the fans to look at that one.

Two exhibitions of cagy boxing by veterans went for naught as the officials scrambled their votes in the preliminaries and wound up by giving Charley Burns, of Johnstown, the referee's decision over Willie Davies, Charleroi veteran, in the six-round semi-final, and Eddie Hebner, of Clairton, a draw with Steve O'Malley, of Bellaire. Davies outfoxed his younger foe throughout, won five of the six rounds by making Burns miss and scoring cleanly, and had Charley bathed in blood from a leaking nose almost throughout the fight. Burns recently similarly got an undeserved decision over Nat Litfin at the Garden. O'Malley, several years ago a favorite here, now doing a comeback, outsmarted the slow-moving Hebner all of the way, but to no avail. The boxing of the veterans was not appreciated.

BAZZONE BEATS ELLING

Joey Bazzone dropped Max Elling for a count of five in the first round and won the referee's decision over him in the six-round second bout, and Don Asto, of Uniontown, was outscoring Johnny Durso up to the time Referee Joe Zivic stopped their scheduled six-round opener in the fourth round because of a cut eye suffered by Asto.

The house was only fair in size. Announcement that a card of three 10-round bouts and two five-rounders next Friday night would be headed by a return meeting between Frank Novak and Jack Pallat, heavyweights, was not enthusiastically received.

OUIMET'S GOLF

By FRANCIS OUIMET

Former National Amateur and Open Golf Champion.

Lately there has been a tendency on the part of our leading golfers to fill up their bags with all sorts of wood and iron clubs, and, in my opinion, there is little to be gained by doing so. I believe it is quite proper to have several extra clubs, but these should be kept at home or in the locker, rather than in the bag that one uses for the most part.

Francis Ouimet

Playing against Gene Sarazen at the Miami-Biltmore Country Club, Olin Dutra had 23 clubs in his bag, and, while I apologize for even suggesting that a player of Dutra's ability should restrict himself to fewer clubs, at the same time I do think at times even this great golfer must be confused as to which one of several mashie niblicks he should use.

BALL USED SIX CLUBS

In the back of my mind are two incidents that stand out in bold relief and have to do with two star amateur golfers. The first is built around John Ball. In the old days, when Ball was consistently winning British amateur championships, he never carried more than six clubs in his bag. The set included a driver, brassie, cleek, mid-iron, mashie and putter. There was no mashie niblick, no No. 4 iron, no No. 2 iron or any other extra club in his bag. To be sure, in the days of John Ball's supremacy, such clubs were not known, and the player had to depend upon his skill in handling a few clubs to carry him through.

For example, on a shot that required a distance less than the full power of the cleek or more than the normal power of the mid-iron, the player had the option of playing either what was known as a "spared cleek" or else a "forcing mid-iron." I have seen John Ball himself on a hole, where many competitors were using a mashie and mashie niblick take an ordinary mid-iron similar to the No. 3 iron, and play a beautiful stroke with a quarter swing, during which the ball never deviated from the line to the flag, while some other competitor with a more lofted club was winding up like a clock and hitting all over the lot. In other words, the old fellows had to learn to play golf skillfully, and had to depend upon their own ability rather than their clubs to see them through.

TOO MANY PUTTERS

The other incident I refer to was an experience suffered by Chick Evans, Jr., during a semi-final match in an amateur championship many years ago. At the time Chick was considered to be the outstanding amateur in the country, with but one weakness, and that was his inability to hole short putts. His golfing equipment was modest enough and he seemed to have fewer clubs than the average star player with but one exception and that was a collection of putters he always carried. It was strange indeed to see but five irons in his equipment, and then four putters. These four putters, I do believe, were mainly responsible for his inability to putt. I think if Chick Evans could start his golfing career all over again, blessed with the same great skill, and eliminate all but one putter, he would have established a record almost on a parity to that of Bobby Jones. In any event, in a trying situation in the semi-final match, Chick was so undecided as to which one of the four putters to use he missed a three-foot putt of vital importance, for no other reason than a confused state of mind, and it so shook his confidence that it was years before he got over it.

If the average youngster coming along wishes to excel at the game of golf, I honestly believe he must learn to master a few rather than a great many clubs. It is the practice with a few that teach him a wider range of strokes and equips him with the skill to handle any club he may care to use.

STARS BATTLE IN HANDBALL FINAL TODAY

By PAUL G. SULLIVAN

Theos Manos, perennial district glove premier, seeks this afternoon to add the 1933 Allegheny Mountain Association (A. A. U., senior doubles handball crown to the singles trophy that he annexed a week ago.

Ably abetted by his veteran K. A. C. clubmate, Curtis Clark, Manos battles Al Bialas and Harry Kraeling, powerful P. A. A. pair, in the final contest at the Keystone Athletic Club, the fray winding up a fortnight of title action wherein virtually every outstanding local player has competed. The dual classic is slated for 2:30 o'clock.

Meanwhile, at the P. A. A., the intra-mural handicap handball tourney, under supervision of Athletic Director Hyatt, approaches conclusion. Kraeling has attained the singles final through defeat of King Richwine, 21-13, 21-18, and now awaits the outcome of jousts involving Bialas, Lieut. D. C. Tredennick and Vin McGuinness in the lower half.

Tom Thornton and W. Y. Cocken copped fast doubles jousts from Tredennick and Eugene Haverty, while Ruttenbusch and Eckhardt won over Hecht and Altmayer, 21-20, 21-17, to join Arnd and Campbell in the semi-finals.

Coach Harold Mortlock has announced that Winged Head intra-club scratch squash racquet championship tournaments in classes A, B and C will begin today with nearly three-score entrants.

SPENCE BOYS, FISSLER STAR

NEW YORK, April 1.—(AP.)—The speedy Spence brothers from Brooklyn, who have had almost a monopoly on the best performances so far, and chunky George Fissler gave the home club a clean sweep of the three events of the National A. A. U. men's swimming championships, raced last night in the New York Athletic Club pool.

Fissler, something of a dark horse in a field which included Jack Medica, the 18-year-old Seattle sensation, the even younger Ralph Flanagan, from Miami, and Ted Wiget, Stanford University ace, swam to an easy victory in the 20-yard free style.

Leonard Spence captured the 220-yard breast stroke as expected, missing his own world record time by some two seconds. Then these two joined up with John Howland, former Yale star, and Walter Spence, elder brother of Leonard, to give the New York A. C. first team a rather hollow victory over the club's second quartet in the 400-yard relay.

Seven events have been contested so far, and no marks have fallen. The meet will be concluded tonight.

STOCKS BRACE AS CARRIERS TURN UP

NEW YORK, April 1.—(AP.)—Stocks were firm in the early trading today in contrast to yesterday's heavy close. Rails recovered moderately as did other principal issues.

Advances of major fractions were made by Consolidated Gas, Public Service of New Jersey, American Telephone, New York Central, Santa Fe, Case, Union Pacific and United States Steel. Slight gains were made by Drug, Harvester, du Pont and Delaware and Hudson. Corn Products dipped a shade.

Action of the Missouri Pacific in seeking expeditious reorganization under the new federal bankruptcy law was the outstanding item of overnight news, and again brought forcibly to Wall street's attention the problem of topheavy railroad capital structures. However, it was pointed out that securities of such roads are already severely deflated, so that reorganization might well be considered more constructive than otherwise.

A recapitulation of dividend action during the past month shows that total declarations, embracing all classes of shares, made by 1,200 corporations, amounted to $197,702,862, as against payments totaling $311,741,233 voted by 1,462 corporations in March, 1932.

The decrease in the country's gold holdings for March was $121,339,497, as compared with a decrease of $174,491,203 in February, and contrasted with a gain of $32,251,600 in March, 1932.

Foreign exchanges opened firm against the dollar. Sterling's initial quotations were $3.42½, a gain of ⅜ of a cent. Francs opened at 3.92⅞ cents, an advance of ⅛ point.

BEER ORDERS SPEED GLASS

With production of beer bottles at the highest point in 14 years, and with new units coming into production on similar containers, the bottle-making industry is getting wide benefit from the return of the legal sale of beer, according to American Glass Review. The bar glassware producers also are feeling the effects of the demand for beer containers because the beverage requires a tumbler, a goblet or a mug for proper service.

Even the flat glass trade is affected by the growing interest in the return of legal beer, as many interiors are being remodeled and made ready. Mirrors and large windows were a necessary adjunct to public beer-drinking in the old days and they will not be passed by entirely as the new era gets under way.

At the moment, the various branches of the industry are concerned with meeting the hurried demands made upon them and there has not been opportunity to see where and how deeply the return of beer is going to affect other containers and demand for other glassware. Some drop is anticipated, although a gain in beverage glassware for home use is anticipated. New designs and decorations are coming onto the market from glassware factories and decorating shops, so that beer drinking in the home may be more of a gala affair than it was before the Volstead act was enacted.

SEARS SALES SHOW DROP

For the first two periods, January 30 to March 26, inclusive, sales were $30,042,477, compared with $38,646,726 for the same periods last year—a decrease of $8,604,249, or 22.3 per cent.

NEW YORK, April 1.—Lerner Stores sales for February amounted to $1,205,445, against $1,449,019 in February, 1932, and for two months totaled $2,354,567, compared with $2,854,081 in the first two months of 1932.

ECONOMIC LIFE BALANCE OF OUTPUT, USE

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University.

NEW YORK, April 1.—Economic life, as it works out in the "game" of business, consists pretty largely in getting a balance between production and consumption. We are ever trying to produce enough food, clothing and other goods to satisfy our wants, or trying to deal with cases of "overproduction."

What then is "production?"

Production consists in making such adjustments in the materials furnished by nature as enable them to satisfy human wants.

We do not produce matter. We merely make adjustments in it, by (1) changing its from (cotton to cloth), (2) changing its location (cloth from Fall River to Chicago), or (3) holding it from one time to another (Chicago merchants stock cloth in February for Easter sale).

PRODUCTIVITY TEST

Thus, farmers and miners are no more producers than are truck drivers or storekeepers.

The only test of productivity lies in the question, does the thing done help to satisfy a human want? The basic test is the utility created. In short, production exists for the sake of construction.

All production, however, involves more or less cost, either in labor, or saving, or risk taking. In this world few of us can satisfy our wants unless we work, save and run risks. There would be very little cloth for Chicago consumers without all of these human costs.

So the problem of balancing production and consumption comes down to the problem of balancing "costs" and "utilities." (Costs are the efforts and sacrifices made by producers, and utilities are the satisfactions derived by consumers).

COULD HAVE BALANCE

If producers' costs were in balance with consumers' utilities, we could be fairly sure that production and consumption would be in balance. This would mean that all of us, as consumers, would be getting enough "utilities" to compensate us from our costs as producers.

To be sure, we might want more, but there is no way on this earth for men in the long run to satisfy all wants. The best we can do is to get our wants and our efforts (utilities and costs) into balance.

Some advocate cutting down our wants, but few wish to do that. So most of us try to increase our production. This means costs, but we can and do try to reduce the costs of production so that we can get more utilities for a given cost.

How may we increase our productivity? To understand this question, we must consider several "factors of production" and their "costs."

LABOR'S PART

First, there is labor, or direct human effort in production. Within limits we can increase production by working harder, which means more fatigue and drudgery.

Laborers can also specialize so as to become more efficient in a particular job. This we call "division of labor."

Second, we can create more labor-saving instruments, such as machinery, which economists call "capital." These enable us to harness the forces of nature, reduce friction, and in other ways add to the possibilities of production.

The peculiar cost required in the creation of capital is "saving." Someone has to abstain from consuming things now in order to make tools, invest in factory plans, etc.

BUSINESS MEN LINK

Third, we can organize and direct our production more efficiently. For this service we have come to depend upon a distinct group of men, whom we generally call "business men," but economists call them "enterprisers," or "enterpremeurs."

They bring together capital and labor and land (as in farms, factories and stores), agreeing to pay for these at stipulated rates of compensation. Then they decide what and how much to make, and when to sell the products.

This service of organizing and directing production requires a special skill and much risk.

LAND ALWAYS USED

Fourth, we note that all production uses "land." All producers require some materials drawn from "the land," and all must work in some location on land. The service of land seems to come without any human cost—but of that, more later.

Clearly, production can be increased by using only the best lands required, and by seeing to it that each piece of land is used for the best purpose for which it is suited.

But sometimes it seems that we have too much production. On Wednesday we will discuss "overproduction."

OIL MEN SPLIT ON PROGRAM

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP.)—Conflicting claims emanated yesterday from rival factions which attended the recent governors' oil conference.

Declaring the conference had abandoned its original program for federal control of oil production, the Independent Petroleum Association opposed to monopoly filed with Secretary Ickes a brief opposing a proposed 15-day shutdown in the flush fields.

At the same time, Wirt Franklin, of Oklahoma City, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said in a statement that "the quicker action is taken upon the program proposed by the American petroleum industry, the more rapidly will it lead the way back to a resumption of normal business conditions throughout the nation."

WEEKLY BANK CLEARINGS

NEW YORK, April 1.—(AP.)—Bank clearings continue somewhat restricted in amount. The total for this week, for all leading cities in the United States, as shown by the records of Dun and Bradstreet, Inc., of $3,704,839,000 was 6.7 per cent under that of a year ago. At New York City, clearings are $2,667,234,000, a reduction of only 0.2 per cent, while the total for centers outside of New York of $1,037,605,000 is 20.1 per cent smaller.

The losses outside of New York City are mainly at the larger centers, among these Chicago and Detroit, the latter now reporting for a part of the week for the first time since the bank holiday. At many points, particularly at the South and Pacific Coast points, the losses again are small. At some cities there is an increase in the amount of clearings this week. Minneapolis and Louisville being included in the number. It is customary for bank clearings in the final week of the month to show some reduction, and for this week the total is $980,648,000 below that of the previous week; a year ago the decline was $729,025,000.

The report for leading centers showing increases and decreases as compared with those of last year, is printed herewith; also, average daily bank clearings since October:

STEEL BUYING TREND TILTS UPWARD

By B. E. V. LUTY

For two weeks there has been a slight upward trend in the volume of steel demand, not enough to affect the rate of production appreciably.

For the third successive week production of steel ingots has been at approximately 13 per cent of capacity, following four weeks of declining production from the high of the year, 21 to 22 per cent.

While production may begin its upturn next week, there are no positive indications by the volume of buying in the last few days that it will do so.

Nearly all the finished steel markets present such an appearance of extreme quietness that some observers wonder where the steel is going that is made, and it is remarked that clearly nothing can stop the steel industry altogether. In the last three weeks production of ingots has been at about 9,000,000 gross tons a year, or 20 per cent of average production in the very active seven-year period through 1929.

AUTOS RESUME

There is ample opportunity for demand to snap back to the rate prevailing just before the banking crisis began to appear. Thereby production would increase by about two-thirds, but the market would present an appearance of being two or three times as active as lately.

Production of automobiles is being resumed, there having been an almost complete stoppage after the Michigan bank holiday proclamation of February 14. Production last October was 51,625 cars and trucks, United States and Canada, low for many years, there being monthly increases to 133,472 in January, while with declining operations during February that month totaled 110,117. March output has been much lighter. The present upward trend is expected to be accentuated after the middle of the month.

Several orders for rails, of modest size, are expected within the next fortnight. Since early in the year there has been virtually no rail production except by the Colorado mill. Opinion is indefinite as to how soon action at Washington can put railroads in shape for making substantial repairs and improvements. After its decline, traffic began increasing week before last.

Buying by jobbers has been increasing for more than two weeks but is still on a small scale. Outside of this and the automobile industry there are few cases of definite increases in steel demand. Substantial improvement in demand when it does come is expected to be widespread and of very miscellaneous character, with no heavy buying in any particular direction. Need for repair and upkeep work has been accumulating in the last few weeks more rapidly than ever.

CONFIDENCE GAINS

Steel sellers find that there is still a marked deficiency in banking facilities, and this is held wholly responsible for the sluggishness of the market. Confidence in the future has been increasing continuously for four weeks, on the part of producers, jobbers and consumers alike.

Under date of March 29 steel pipe producers issued new discount cards increasing the basing discount on black standard pipe by 3½ points or $7 a net ton and making greater reductions in larger sizes, while all through the list galvanized pipe is reduced more than black, the average on the whole category being fully $10 a net ton. Pipe had not declined in the last 10 years nearly as much as several other finished steel products.

Prices on other finished steel products have been very steady, the irregularities of early in the year having disappeared. Hopes entertained recently that some of the cheapest lines could be advanced are deferred, but there remain chances for the third quarter to shorten the losses now being incurred.

Heavy melting steel scrap delivered Pittsburgh district has become quotable at $9 to $9.50, representing two 25-cent advances in the last 10 days. Demand has been light, but the flow of offerings has dried up almost completely.

COAL AGENCY IN PA. PLANNED

ALTOONA, Pa., April 1.—(AP.)—A committee of the Central Pennsylvania Coal Producers' Association is working today on plans for a sales agency to operate similarly to Appalachian Coals, Inc.

Organization of the agency, the plan of which was recently declared legal by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Appalachian Coals, was discussed by operators last night.

The committee includes H. S. Clark, Indiana; J. N. Caseley, DuBois; A. M. Liveright, Clearfield, and Walter A. Jones, Altoona.

The proposed agency, as discussed by the operators, would operate in the central field and possibly for Cumberland, Md., and Northern West Virginia producers. This area has a productive capacity of approximately 100,000,000 tons annually.

The Flapper's Daughter

By BEATRICE BURTON

THRILLING NOVEL OF THE CHILDREN OF DANCING MOTHERS

CHAPTER X.

The rooms behind the hardware store looked dirtier and drearier than ever in the cold, hard daylight when Sharlie followed her new husband into them that afternoon at five.

"Welcome home!" said Eddie with his cheerful grin, setting her two suitcases and her hatbox down in the middle of the sitting room.

Welcome home! Sharlie's delicate nostrils sniffed the stale air laden with the smell of cold ashes and mildew and tobacco.

"I'll go and break the good news to my dad while you get your bags unpacked." Eddie said to her. The grin had faded from his face and he was studying her with anxious, wistful eyes.

"Eddie, this is like some awful joke that's been played on us, isn't it?" she asked as she followed him into his bedroom. Their bedroom, now.

He dropped the bags on the floor and, turning, took her quickly into his arms.

"Why, no!" he said, and she could tell that he meant it. "It's not an awful joke at all. It's the best thing that ever happened—That's how I look at it. We would probably have been married sooner or later anyway."

"How am I going to stay here?" she asked herself when he had left her alone while he went to break the news of the wedding to his father.

MEETS FATHER-IN-LAW

She couldn't make herself believe that she really was going to spend the night in this place. She couldn't even bring herself to unpack her bags and put her clothing away in the golden oak dresser with its bare and dusty top.

She was still sitting on the edge of the bed with her yellow felt hat on when Eddie came back into the room bringing his father with him.

Mr. Wallis made her think of Huckleberry Finn's father. He had a great deal of greasy black hair and a lot of thick black moustache. His eyebrows looked like strips of black fur above his watery blue eyes.

He was smiling broadly when he came into the room and his smile revealed a mouthful of stained and broken teeth.

Sharlie's heart sank at the sight of him.

But before he had been in the room two minutes she began to like him.

If everybody else thought this marriage of hers and Eddie's was a tragedy, he certainly did not.

"Best thing that ever happened to you, Eddie Wallis!" he told his son solemnly when he had looked Sharlie over and shaken her small hand. "Nice little girl this!—How did a loafer like him ever get you to fall for him, daughter?"

PREPARE FOR DINNER

Then, before Sharlie had time to think of an answer, he went on:

"Well, we'll have to have a little celebration, won't we, children? What say we all go down to the Goodfellows' Grotto and have a chicken supper with all the fixin's? Nice little weddin' supper—and a little drink of wine right here before we go?"

Sharlie shook her head . . . Not for anything in the world would she walk into a restaurant with Eddie Wallis' father, she told herself. Why, he looked like a hobo!

"No. Let's stay right here tonight, Mr. Wallis," she said. "We can have a chicken dinner, Eddie, if you'll go out and buy a chicken and some carrots and onions and potatoes I can make some awfully good casserole chicken."

With a tight-lipped little smile on her face and a heart like lead, she put on an apron and went out into the kitchen.

Eddie and his father helped her get the meal ready. Both of them knew how to cook. Mr. Wallis cleaned the chicken and Eddie, with tears running down his face, peeled the onions.

Sharlie found some clean linen in a drawer in the small dark dining room and set the table with it. . . . So this was what she had come to, she told herself miserably, as she went to work. Keeping house for Eddie Wallis and his father in five dark little dirty rooms behind a hardware store on Seventeenth street.

"I won't stay here," she thought. "I just won't stay here! —I won't let this thing happen to me!"

GRIM REALITY

But it HAD happened to her, and here she was! Her mother had told her she couldn't stay in the flat any longer. She had no home now but this one . . . Her bags were in Eddie's room, her first meal for him was cooking in the kitchen, and she was setting the table for him and his father this very minute!

"I'm sunk," she thought, wiping of the dusty seat of a chair with her little apron. She couldn't find a duster anywhere in the place.

After supper Eddie washed the dishes and she wiped them.

"Eddie's mother saved up coupons out of oatmeal boxes and got that there set of dishes with 'em," Mr. Wallis told her from his seat on one corner of the rickety kitchen table.

Sharlie looked at them. They were chipped and there were pinkish-purple violets stamped upon them . . . She wondered if she would soon be saving coupons for a new set. Her face darkened at the thought. She could see herself growing old in this kitchen.

Once more she said to herself: "I won't stay here!"

"Let's go to the movies," she suggested to Eddie when the last of the pans were put away and the dishcloth hung up over the faucets in the sink to dry.

GO TO MOVIES

Eddie looked at his watch.

"It's 9 o'clock," he said. "Wouldn't you rather unpack your bags and get settled? I'm tired, aren't you? . . . We didn't get much sleep last night sitting in the car . . ."

"I'm not a bit tired!" Sharlie interrupted sharply. "I'd like to get out for a while! Come along, Eddie, let's go!"

She ran into Eddie's bedroom, small as an animal's lair, and picked up her yellow hat from the bed.

The room was in some kind of order now. Eddie must have come in and straightened it up.

There was a clean towel on the dresser. Her bags were open on the floor. The bedspread had been pulled straight and smooth and the pillows had been "plumped up" and covered with clean, white cases.

In the darkness of the moving picture theater Eddie tried to find her hand and hold it. But she drew it away from him, wrapped in her own misery.

And when the show was over and they were driving home he tried to draw her close to him.

"Don't!" she said. "I don't want to be loved, Eddie! Please let me alone!"

EDDIE INJURED

He stared at her in astonishment.

"You've always been as keen as mustard for a bit of necking, Babe," he reminded her. "I don't understand you now—"

"I don't understand myself," she broke in irritably. "I—I always liked you, Eddie. But I never thought I'd have to marry you . . . What are you stopping for?"

He had drawn the car up to the curbstone.

"I just want to get some cigarets, that's all," he answered. He was getting out of the car as he spoke.

She saw him start across the black, wet pavement toward the brightly-lighted cigar store on the other side of the street.

Halfway across he turned his head for an instant. She knew that he was looking back at her . . . Then an automobile dashed past, hiding him from her for a second or two.

When it passed he was not there . . . Then she saw his body rolling over and over in the street. The car had struck him!

"EDDIE! EDDIE!" She never knew she screamed his name. She never knew how she got out of the car and across the wet asphalt to where he lay.

Synopsis

Young and pretty Sharlie Dunn is attracted to irresponsible Eddie Wallis. One night, Eddie takes Sharlie to his apartment and makes violent love to her. She flees in fear, and, returning home, interrupts a tete-a-tete between her mother and Carl Hanaberry, a friend's husband. Next evening Jim Barnum, a neighbor, invites Sharlie to the theater. As they leave Eddie arrives and forbids Sharlie to go. Then she goes with Eddie instead. On the way home from a roadhouse Eddie's car runs out of gas. He and Sharlie spend the night in the car. Next morning Sharlie and Eddie accede to Mrs. Dunn's demands and get married.

U. S. FOOD LAWS PROHIBIT ADULTERATION OR MISBRANDING OF FOODS AND DRUGS

(Left) Federal chemist examining samples of canned food for viable bacteria. When canned foods are processed according to approved methods, they contain no living bacteria which would cause decomposition. A food is adulterated under the pure food law if it contains decomposed material.

(Center) Test of imitation grape beverage for artificial grape flavor. Imitation fruit beverages can be sold lawfully if they are non-injurious and labeled as imitations; the same goes for the artificial flavors.

(Right) Federal food inspector is sampling nuts from Brazil on the docks at New York City. He will pass only those free from worminess and moldiness for sale to protect the public. (Problems of Democracy.)

VITAMIN B OR WATER-SOLUBLE VITAMIN (Science)

Vitamin B (chemical composition not yet identified) is necessary for the growth and well-being of the body. Its absence from the food causes loss of appetite, cessation of growth and malnutrition of the nervous system. Left: Dog showing polyneuritis with marked paralysis of hind legs as result of diet lacking vitamin B. Right: The same dog cured by vitamin B given in form of tomato juice. Good sources of vitamin B are: Grain products, except white flour and polished rice; brains, kidneys and liver; grapefruit, lemons, oranges, tomatoes; milk, vegetables, nuts and yeast. It is one of the greatest airplanes actually in use, has 12 giant motors, carries 169 passengers and weighs with full load about 50 tons. It was successfully flown from Germany to Brazil, New York and back to Germany. (Science.)

FORUM UNDER THE CAESARS (World's History)

The Forum Magnum ("great open place") was the center of the Roman civic life. It stretched from the arch of Septimus Severus to the Temple of the Dioscuri and was surrounded by magnificent buildings for judicial, legislative and administrative, as well as for religious purposes. Here, orators addressed the people, acrobats offered entertainment; merchants their wares.

BOYLE'S LAW (Chemistry)

Boyle (1662) and Mariotte (1676) separately announced the same law governing the volume and pressure of gases. It reads that the volumes of the gases are inversely proportional to their pressures at constant temperature. In other words, the product of the specific volume and the pressure of a gas at a given temperature is a constant.

If P denotes the pressure (pounds per square foot) and V the volume of the gas (in cubic feet) under this pressure at a temperature T (degrees F.), similarly p stands for another pressure resulting in volume v at the same T temperature, then PV=pv=c (constant).

Plotting the pressures as ordinates and the volumes as abscissas the curves we get are equilateral hyperbolas for each value of c. When far from the point of liquefaction, gases follow Boyle's law; near to it they deviate widely. (Ennis: Applied Thermodynamics.)

Approving the January Inaugurals

Guess we saw the last of the red hot inaugurals last month.

Starting next time they are launching new Presidents in January.

There will be no shouting and tumult. There will be no parades. The boys are just going to sneak up on each other.

It explains the determined action of the Tammany boys on Pennsylvania avenue last March fourth.

The parade had been over for hours. It was twilight. But the New Yorkers kept marching up and down in their silk hats. They were still marching around midnight. Now, we realize they knew it was their last chance and they were going to get in some good, reliable footwork.

With Presidents indorsing the Constitution and other established documents on January Twentieth it means the end of music, marching and garnishing.

We'll take our ceremonies without parsley. Everything will be indoors except the weather. You cannot parade in January with your spats full of icicles and the snow up to your victorious lapels.

Of course, we will get word-by-word descriptions from experienced observers like Floyd Gibbons and Damon Runyon who would just as soon see a cabinet take the oath of office as watch the Chinese being defeated.

The writer has seen McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Hoover and Franklin D. all stand on the same spot as Coolidge and sign the papers. It is an imposing ceremony and we always joined in the cheering. We attended on the hopes that the Vice-President would escape and join the lawn party on the steps.

But, we never saw the V. P. And after all these years we discover he joins the lodge indoors. Well, next time the President will be in there with him. In case it gets stuffy we'll call an extra session of Congress to open a window.

We're glad we piped the last inauguration because it was real spiffery and gorgeous. Music, hosses, floats, advertisements, Boy Scouts, policemen, firemen and thousands of politicians.

But the January ceremony gets rid of the lame goslings in Congress. And that's better than watching the Democrats walk when they can afford to ride for the first time in years.

The Harrisburg Grab Bag

Legislators Seeking Selfish Advantage Ignore the People's Welfare—Comment on Local News.

The Legislature has been in session nearly three months, but no important major legislation has been enacted. The selfishness of the members is the basic reason for the snarls and wrangles. Nor is Gov. Pinchot guiltless of selfishness. If the welfare of the people had been put first, honest differences of opinion would have been ironed out by now and the lawmakers would be almost ready to adjourn.

The General Assembly is like a grab bag in which the members snatch for plums that will benefit them personally or their factions, without regard to how the people will fare. The beer squabble is a fair example. One crowd insists on surrounding applications for licenses with red tape and letting the Quarter Sessions Court issue them, so as to make business for lawyers; another group insists that the Democrats shall get some jobs out of it—and so it goes.

Gov. Pinchot's plan to issue brewery licenses through the Alcohol Permit Board and retail licenses through the Department of Revenue has more to commend it than the others. It would permit beer to be sold in a respectable manner by various shops and merchants. Licenses would be issued to anyone of moral character, and the liquor business would thus be freed from its old stigma.

At the same time, under the Pinchot plan, reason- able restrictions would be imposed to keep beer out of the hands of minors, and to keep drinking places a reasonable distance away from schools and churches. Some degree of local option would be allowed municipalities to safeguard the zoning laws. The cost of administration would be lower than under the other plans, and the revenues to the state greater.

Some of the tax provisions of the Pinchot bill are probably unreasonable. The tax of $2.48 on a barrel of beer, added to the federal $1 tax, might make it difficult or impossible to sell it at 5 cents a glass. But the measure does go a long way towards keeping the beer business out of politics, and if there were less selfishness at Harrisburg it would get favorable consideration.

Because of this selfishness many things that are vital if the people of Pennsylvania are to get a square deal have been neglected or jammed into difficulties from which they will not easily be extricated unless a more patriotic spirit manifests itself among the legislators. Is it too much to expect that a majority of these men will put patriotism above personal or partisan advantage?

Unemployment relief, the balancing of the budget, the regulation of the public utilities, the modification of the Blue Law—these and other important matters remain to be cleared up. The prospect for a satisfactory adjustment of the differences on these pieces of legislation is far from bright. Forceful leaders could do much to clear the situation, but there are no forceful leaders.

More merit attaches to the Legislature's refusal to do certain things than to some of its positive actions. It deserves credit for declining to close certain of the State Teachers' colleges, as had been proposed. All of these colleges are needed, if not to furnish teachers, at least to furnish opportunities for higher education. To have closed any of them would have been false economy.

The Legislature also has it to its credit that it has placed no obstacles in the way of the proposed constitutional amendment by which the municipalities of Allegheny County may unite to form a greater city of Pittsburgh if a majority of the voters approve. The bill has passed the Senate and is making progress in the House.

Yesterday was the last day for filing the United States income tax return, and also the last day for having one's automobile inspected in accordance with the requirement of the state law. As usual, many persons put off these duties until the last moment, and because of their dilatoriness were subjected to inconvenience. If you were one of them, resolve not to procrastinate the next time.

Thanks to the periodic compulsory automobile inspection, only 8 per cent of the 41,004 motor accidents in Pennsylvania last year were due to defective car equipment, according to an analysis that has been made by the highway safety committee of the Pittsburgh Motor Club. That means that 92 per cent of the highway mishaps were due to bad driving.

The interesting discovery has been made that pas- sengers in automobiles and pedestrians on the streets and roads are five times safer when road surfaces are wet or covered with snow and ice than when the roads are dry and motor conditions are perfect. The explanation is that drivers are more cautious in rainy and snowy weather.

Two weeks from today the trout season will open in Pennsylvania. A wholesome pastime, with the possibility of acquiring a supply of toothsome food at little or no cost, will be made available for some of Pennsylvania's 1,321,842 unemployed workmen. It is gratifying to learn from the Fish Commission that the high water of the last month has been favorable for a good angling season.

The rainfall in March was far greater than the usual amount for that month; but the precipitation for each of the three months immediately preceding, and for the whole of 1932, was below normal. Hence we were entitled to, and will be benefited by a surplus. Perhaps agriculture and business would be better off with more regularity in the weather. But after all its uncertainty tends to make life piquant.

Conditions are propitious for an early blossoming of spring flowers. You will find a beautiful picture of vernal blooms in the Gravure Section of the Sunday Sun-Telegraph. It shows a girl gathering crocuses high in the Swiss Alps. Another attractive picture is of a section of the University of Pittsburgh campus touched with the beauty of an early spring snowfall.

Another beautiful picture will be found in the American Weekly, distributed as a supplement with the Sunday Sun-Telegraph. It is a picture of a charming girl in a dancing posture and accompanies the first installment of a new serial that starts in the Weekly tomorrow—"Big Time," by Rae Chadwell. There are plenty of other good things in this magazine, too.

Our hero makes a gallant try
To keep his arid country dry,
And at the dike intends to stay
Until the flood sweeps him away.

And when the floodgates open wide
Still at his post he will abide
And yet, instead of feeling sad,
We laugh at this heroic lad!

Once Overs

—By J. J. Mundy—

Do you take everything in the way of favors that others may bestow, b with no thought or desire to repay in kind?

While it is true that what one does for another should not be done with hope of reward, it is nevertheless an unwritten law that one should not accept what one is unwilling to repay.

In a social way you may be a leech.

You never fail to accept invitations, but seldom return them.

Some folks are so pleasing as guests and so entertaining that they assist the hostess to the extent she is always glad to include these charming people.

But more than likely you are not to be included in the very small class that can pay their gifted conversation or entertainment.

You may belong to a prominent family, you may have wealth, you may be a good dresser, an interesting conversationalist, but these gifts are not sufficient to repay a hostess for repeated invitations without some show of appreciation from you.

Get away from the idea that others should be glad to include you and that you lend so much by your presence that you need do nothing but accept favors at the hands of your friends.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, April 1.—Purely personal piffle: I love to lick the glazed paper they wrap around fried chicken. Mrs. Irvin Cobb has the most engaging speaking voice I know. Eugene O'Neill's plays always seem to need editing. With few exceptions, my confidence in dog hospitals is limited.

I've been speaking for years to three men I do not know from Adam's off ox. Conrad Veidt is the sort of looking villain I'd like to be when I go in for villainy. I'm too old and no account to quarrel. They fed me spiked punch at my first dance. And I went home crying.

Cabbage is the only dish that does not agree with me. But I always can eat it. I never heard a poll parrot say the wrong thing. I like to pronounce the name of that Russian actress—Baclanova. I know now what was the matter with my Peru bond. Was I a sucker!

* * *

I'd rather spend an evening with Ted Healy and his stooges than with George Bernard Shaw. Isham Jones sounds like slipping suddenly off a curb. There's something especially charming about Danish women. One of the most efficient kidders I ever knew was the late Jim Quirk.

* * *

I feel important when anyone calls me "Boss." George Arliss has a fascinating walk. When I buy anything in leather, I sniff it first. The play I've enjoyed most this year is, "One Sunday Afternoon." At last, they glorify a wife instead of the keptee. I've given dogs to 20 children and everyone has turned out a rare pet. Ring Lardner writes the drollest of all letters.

* * *

At sea, I think I'd like to be a seaman. On land, I don't see how they bear it. Maj. Joe Hartfield gave me the only patent lead pencil that ever worked. Only one tailor has ever made me a vest that fits. The others go womp. Wretch that I am, I try to trip people who do not thank me for standing in the theater. And, man and boy, I've tripped some folk you've read about. No other year has produced so many idols with clay feet. Damon Runyon writes the best and most true-to-life short stories about life on Broadway. The best financial advice I ever received was from Horace Riley, a bank president in my Missouri home town of 2,000.

* * *

The most restful spot I know, to eat, is a little Armenian place called Arakel's. No odor is so delightful as that of frying catfish. I skim through Arthur Brisbane's column first thing, in a morning paper. Envelopes from the U. S. Income Tax Bureau make me flinch. The mildest gentleman I ever met was J. M. Barrie. I have never doubted that Radio City will eventually be a success. Nor do I think the Empire Building is in vain. Some day it will fill.

* * *

The man who discusses old-time New York most entertainingly is James Moore, the restaurant man. Frank Sullivan furnishes more belly laughs than any humorist. George Ade's personal letters usually are on yellow ruled paper. I can have more fun making people who have had too much to drink try to pronounce: "Enunciate inconsequentiality." The day all the banks closed, I couldn't write a line.

* * *

I know a lady who grows faint when Lawrence Tibbett tops a high note. I married the only childhood sweetheart I ever had. The nastiest letter I ever received was from a man who said I sneered at the Social Register because I could not get in it. Fancy! A letter that made me sob out loud was from a 16-year-old blind girl in Massachusetts. Brock Pemberton is, to my notion, the most astute theatrical producer.

* * *

I'm a fool for moving picture plots on trains. My nearest to devotion for classical music is for Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" and Ravel's "Bolero." The most perfect use of the Oxonian accent is that of Alfred Shirley, in radio broadcasts now and then.

* * *

The home I like best around New York is near Greenwich, Conn., with a moat. H. T. Webster once sent me, as a gag, a 7-foot ferocious alligator, from Florida. The only paintings I ever really longed to own were westerns, by Charlie Russell. When I'm sulking, which is about twice a year, my wife praises some column I have written, and I bud right out again.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Nobody likes her—yet never did a woman try harder to be liked.

Ever go window-shopping and peer in at a watchmaker, magnifying glass in eye, laboring over microscopic machinery? All her life she has labored over herself like that, trying to bring each tiny trait of personality to perfection.

There's this commonplace, active laughter, for example. Originally she laughed like the rest of us. Any old sort of a ha-ha-ranging from a lazy blat to a raucous roar. But she has long since discarded these plebian sounds and developed all sorts of laughs for all sorts of occasions—gurgles, trills, brave, bright bleats that are supposed to hint at hidden sobs; tender tremolos.

Could any one work harder to produce a laugh that would be A Gift to Humanity? No they couldn't. Yet, for all the good it does her, she might as well sneeze.

Then there's what she calls her "background." Actually like all the rest of us, she came from somewhere south of the railroad tracks and borrowed the next door neighbor's butter and vanilla for her Ma, like everyone else. But, to our heroine, this is a shameful fact, to be concealed at all costs; and so she's invented an exclusive ancestral history that sounds like a meeting of southern colonels after their tenth mint julep.

With Honest-To-Gosh tears in her eyes, she refers to the "dear old Mammy who guided her baby steps."

If self-culture counts, she certainly should be in the Grade A Class and as welcome as an 8% dividend on your old oil stock. But she isn't. Socially she's a calamity. Strong men hide in medicine closets when they see her coming. Gentle women bite rivets out of kitchen cabinets. And all for why?

All because she isn't real. She's a meaningless fake. Being with her is like watching a movie. Movies are fun for a while; but they have nothing to do with real life, or the problems that wait for you outside the movie door. That exquisite creature flickering across the film—you can't imagine telling her your troubles, tramping with her along dusty country roads, sharing any of life's dear, silly, uncomfortable commonness with her. As a human being, she's a nice sunset—and that lets her out.

SHE ISN'T REAL—AND WHATEVER ELSE THEY MAY OR MAY NOT BE, PEOPLE MUST BE REAL OR WE DON'T WANT THEM AROUND. WE MAY ADMIRE THEM IF THEY'RE NOT REAL, AS WE ADMIRE MOVIES; BUT WE CAN'T BANK ON THEM; WE CAN'T LOVE THEM; WE CAN'T MAKE PARTNERS OF THEM.

Strangely enough, though, we can spot them every time. Humans are queer that way. They may be bone-heads on every other subject, but sooner or later they can always spot a Sham or a Show-Off.

Shams and Show-Offs—you've met them by the hundreds, haven't you? Probably tried their technique till you found it didn't pay.

And here's the pity. Such people have no desire to be cheats, and they don't think they are cheats. They simply want to be loved and admired. They yearn, with a desperate hunger, to move in finer environments than the shabby back-drop of our mutual experience; and nearly always they hold the magic key which would admit them—within their own foolish hands.

IF THEY'D JUST BE THEMSELVES—THEIR REAL SELVES—ADMITTING A COMMON HUMANITY, LAUGHING OVER COMMON MISTAKES, WEEPING OVER SORROWS, THEN, BECAUSE OF THEIR SIMPLE NEIGHBORLINESS, WE'D LOVE THEM—AND THEY WOULD HAVE THAT POWER, FOR WHICH THEY YEARN, OVER OTHER LIVES.

Text for Today Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old?—Micah, vi:6.

Reflections on Meeting At the Garden

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

The meeting at Madison Square Garden and elsewhere in reference to the treatment of the German Jews, were more in the nature of an appeal than a protest. Never at a public meeting in New York since the war have so many tributes been paid to the genius, the culture, the achievements of the German race.

The evident feeling among some in Germany that there has been a revival of the propaganda of hate of war days is clearly a misinterpretation and a misunderstanding. Speaker after speaker spoke with keen appreciation of the fine qualities of the German race and of its immortal contributions to science, literature and the arts.

The revival of a hymn of hate now would be impossible. I happen to be one who never chanted it even in the days when it was popular. Everyone is more or less embarrassed by the remembrance of it now.

To the friends of the Germany that manfully faced so long in patience the impossible terms imposed upon her, the tragedy in the present situation is not merely that Jews have been mistreated but that events have played into the hands of the very few who have continued the war-time prejudice.

As many Americans are thinking of Germany as are thinking of the Jews.

Government Denied Any Outrages

All this can be speedily wiped out by having it made clear that the Jewish people are not to be made the objects of proscription or persecution. It manifestly is absurd to deny that individuals, unfortunately in brown shirts, did attack and persecute Jews because they were Jews in the days immediately following Hitler's assumption of supreme authority. The government has denied any complicity in these outrages. It promised to end them.

Unhappily on top of this, despite the claim of officials that the Jews, unmolested, are following the even tenor of their way, we have the statement from what appears to be quarters close to those in power, that a tremendous boycott is to be organized against Jewish merchants; that many Jews are to be excluded from the advantages of higher education; that only a limited number are to be permitted in the learned professions.

This, of course, is persecution. It is condoned as a measure of retaliation against the appeals of other nations in the Jews' behalf.

It is not convincing to deny in one breath that persecution has existed or is contemplated, and in the next to say that a policy of proscription will be adopted.

Two Observations On Present Situation

There are just two observations to be made on the present situation. One is that governmental circles in Berlin appear to center their indignation, not on individuals of the brown shirts who took matters into their own hands and attacked Jews without provocation and without the approval of government, but upon those in other lands who have been shocked at these attacks. If the attacks made which have injured Germany were made in violation of the policy of the government its indignation should be centered upon these mischief makers.

Another is, that no one is attacking Germany or the German people, but only that small element among them which the government says has brought discredit upon it by taking matters in its own hands and subjecting a portion of the German nation to violence.

No service can be rendered Germany by its present government in seeking to convey the impression to the world that Germans as a people are animated by religious or racial hates; and the Hitler government renders itself a distinct disservice by having it appear that it stands four-square and in fighting mood behind those individuals who have brought a storm about its head.

Hitler Can Still Troubled Waters With a Word

We of America are not Fascists. We are democrats. We believe in the freedom of speech, the liberty of the speech, the liberty of the press, religious and racial toleration, but we are not complaining because Germany has a Fascist dictatorship. That is no one's business but that of Germany. With Italy, where they have a dictatorship, we have no quarrel. Italy is entitled to whatever government she wants—and it is none of our business.

If Hitler can put Germany on its feet economically and financially we of America shall rejoice. Now that he has power he is entitled to an opportunity. But to many, Hitler needs something other than the hostile attitude of the world outside.

From his point of view, from the selfish viewpoint, he should be the first sternly to set aside any policy of mere hate toward Jews, and concentrate on the more important and essential things.

This he has the power to do. Hitler can still the troubled waters with a word.

Meeting at the Garden

Returning now to the enormous mass meeting at Madison Square Garden! In the presence of such a vast throng, most of it touched with deep emotions, there always is the danger that the speakers may give way to emotionalism and to regrettable expressions of resentment. It is remarkable that the speakers kept themselves within proper bounds and uttered not one single syllable derogatory of the German nation or the German people.

The hymn of hate that is so hateful now, as I thought it was in war days, was not heard either from the platform or from the audience. The meeting was marked by restraint, the speeches were phrased in the language of reasonableness and fair play, the great throng was orderly and serious as became the occasion.

As one of the friends of Germany and the great German people, I hope that Hitler will renounce any policy or reprisal or persecution on the Jews and that under his dictatorship Germany, which has suffered so much and deserves so well, can be set in the pathway of prosperity and peace.

Hitler Cannot Wipe Out Bigotry In Germany

Meanwhile it is just as well for us to remember that we of America are not without sin. How absurd the meeting in Madison Square Garden would have been five or six years ago when the hue and cry against Americans because of race and religion was being raised, and persecution and political proscription were on tap!

But our Constitution prohibits such proscription, and our laws and courts are a protection against persecution, and the whole movement was hostile to the fundamental principles of Americanism.

We put that down, by public sentiment. Government was no responsible for its existence. Always there will be bigots, and government cannot act upon the minds and secret thoughts of men. We have bigots in America today—no longer dangerous. Hitler cannot wipe out bigotry in Germany.

All that he can do, and this he should do, is to see to it that bigotry is not written into the laws of Germany and that racial and religious persecution is not made part of the policy of the state. That and the protection of all the people against violence from the minority.

And this we know; that the ancient race that reaches down from the dawn of history and has enriched mankind with its contributions cannot be wiped out by a breath of intolerance and hate.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS

Jig-Saw

With the pieces all before us
It is strange we cannot see
Where each curve will fit in snugly,
Where each angle ought to be!
Yet we try a dozen vainly
With a patience rare indeed,
And at last we thrill with triumph
When we find the piece we need.

Strange, too, there must be such effort,
So much seeking and delay
As we piece the jig-saw puzzle
Of our living, day by day!
Duty should be clear and simple,
Every motive should be plain,
Truth should always lead to rapture,
Love should have no dower or pain.

In the end, though, we shall see it
All complete beneath our hand,
And the reason for our efforts
We at last shall understand.
